FARMERS' INSTITUTE

suggestions made by the speaker. At the close of his speech he answered a number of questions asked of him by farmers present, all of which he answered promptly and intelligently so that there seemed to be no insincerity regarding the subject under discussion.

One of the subjects under consideration at the institute was "Summer Soil and Soiling System," by Prof. Wells W. Cook, of the Agricultural department in Washington, D. C.

The speaker referred to the question of using silage for summer feed as well as for the winter months. His experience proved that the system of feeding cattle met with the best results.

The reason for the entire use of grain as feed is because it lessens the amount of work of the cattle.

To feed silage throughout the entire year a special provision must be made. During the cold weather it is only necessary to use a thin layer of silage each day. As spring advances the amount of silage must be increased, due to the fact that the air acts more strongly on the silage during the warmer seasons.

If the plan of feeding silage throughout the year is decided upon it would be necessary to have more than one silo as a farmer can readily see that it would take an enormous amount of silage to meet the demand.

An excellent system and one which the speaker adopted was to have three silos, one 12 feet, one inch, 9 feet one, and 7 feet in diameter. During the winter the cattle are fed from the largest silo and as summer approaches, the smaller ones are used.

The speaker also stated that it was found best, and in the long run, yielded larger crops to plant silage corn on the same ground each year. To obtain good results through this method the farmer would, of course, have to feed the ground, that is, manure and mellow it thoroughly.

The most important fact of silage is to keep it from connection with the air.

Prof. Cook also spoke of rye, when cut at the proper time, resulting in just as good silage as the best corn. The time is when the head appears on the stalks of rye. Twelve tons of corn and six tons of rye, which is a minimum amount produced per acre, will feed two cows a good meal of silage 365 days in the year.

Prof. Cook brought his lecture to a close with the statement that one of the most important things to consider in raising silage is to prepare the ground thoroughly through the medium of fertilizer.

Mr. Cook was accorded a hearty applause and he certainly deserved it.

Corn, Breeding and Culture.

J. Stuart Grouse, of Jersey Shore, Pa., handled this subject in a very commendable manner. Mr. Grouse was brought up in the city and at an early age decided to become a farmer. The speaker emphasized the fact that his success was partly due to the reason that he did a good many things that his neighbors did not do. He is progressive and through this he has left a good many of his neighbors in the rear, while he is far in the lead.

He discussed the question of corn breeding, and showed that in some instances sweet corn, when raised near feed corn, becomes mixed. The reason for this is that the pollen has been blown from one grade of corn to the other, thus effecting the mixture. This is termed cross pollination. Corn affected in this manner will increase the yield of grain from 25 to 30 per cent.

Mr. Grouse stated that in his experience he found that the best grain corn was that which grew on a level with the height of a waist of a man.

This concluded the subject of corn breeding and the speaker turned to that other branch—Corn Culture.

The speaker stated that he was an advocate of deep plowing as a method of producing better crop results. This takes more horse flesh, or power, but in his experience it was well worth the effort. He said he always cultivated corn after a rain and principally during July.

One advantage of deep plowing is

HUERTA DESPERATE

"I'll Make 'Em Remember Me," He Says.

FIERCE FIGHTING NEAR CAPITAL

Dictator Admits He May Be Forced Out, but Will "Go Down In History"—May Move His Capital and Deal With Zapata.

Mexico City, Dec. 10.—"I may be driven out of here, but before I go I will do something that will make me go down in history for a hundred years," General Victoriano Huerta said.

Owing, it is believed, to desperation Huerta is vacillating in his actions and orders. He revoked his order giving General Telles's command to General Navarette and called Navarette back to the capital.

When the chamber of deputies met it was scheduled to discuss the validity of the recent elections. The subject has been up for consideration several times, and the final vote has been deferred each time.

A small tide of American travel again is turning toward Vera Cruz on account of the many rumors of an approaching battle near the capital.

Important developments are expected hereafter following the departure for San Francisco of the women members of General Huerta's family. It is believed that much more than the announced pleasure trip is behind the move. As a matter of fact, it is believed that General Huerta is providing against the day when he must make his last stand.

The report from London that General Huerta is preparing to move the capital of Mexico to Iguala, state of Guerrero, southwest of the state of Mexico, fails entirely of understanding here. It is known that Huerta has made plans for the contingency of defeat. If he had to abandon Mexico City before the advance of Pancho Villa he might possibly drive a bargain with Emiliano Zapata, bandit and chief of the rebels in Puebla, Morelos and Guerrero, who is even now raiding the suburbs of the City of Mexico.

Fighting Near Capital.

Zapata is accommodating enough, and inasmuch as his own fingers itch for the plunder of Mexico City he would probably oppose Villa. Only by a league with Zapata could Huerta get to Iguala. Such a compact would lack the element of confidence.

There has been continuous fighting between Mexico City and Cuernavaca. Details are lacking, although the net result of the series of engagements seems to be the halting of the Zapistas at least temporarily. There are other Zapista detachments at Amecameco and Ozumba, on the northern boundary of Morelos, and generally there is an increase of rebel activity in the states south of Mexico.

In announcing a victory over the Zapistas in Morelos the government reported officially the killing of Genevieve de la O, a bandit chief, who formerly operated independently of Zapata. It is reported that De la O was found among the rebel dead.

While the rebels are raiding within fifteen miles of the capital, they do not appear in any considerable numbers. Yet conditions are so unsettled that wood cutters and charcoal burners do not dare go out as usual, fearing capture and execution. Troops sent out after the bandits fail to get them.
