WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1892.

President Harrison's annual message, which was sent to congress on Tuesday of last week, will be found on an inside page.

The Standard Oil company is reaching out its long fingers after the Ohio coal fields with the view of consolidating the bituminous coal interests of that state. What McLeod accomplished in the anthracite regions of Pennsylvania—the Rending deal—it is argued can be accomplished in the bituminous coal of Ohio, provided the coal roads could be induced to go into the pool.

Generally when men die, especially men who have become widely known, the press finds something good to say about them, but the newspapers have been showing up Jay Gould in his true life. The millionaire's life was a selfish one even down to the grave. Charity was unknown to the man who accumulated an immense fortune by bankrupting others. Death is no respecter of person, the rich and poor sooner or later yield to the inevitable.

The older one gets the faster, apparently, the years pass by. We can remember when a year seemed to have no end and after Christmas had passed it was really discouraging to look forward to the next Christmas time which was a whole long year away. In the language of Burdette: "Christmas was much farther apart when I was a boy than it now is. It came by the almanac, once a year, which was right and regular. But such long years have never been, since long ago."

A world with no death in it would seem, at first sight, glorious. But perhaps it would be a cold, unsentimental world, with no love in it. If those we press against our hearts could never die perhaps all tenderness would wither from the earth. The thought of death makes us charitable. The knowledge that every erring mortal must die, makes us forgiving. Life is too short to be wasted in fruitless bickerings and strife with your neighbor. He has trouble enough, goodness knows, without your trying to add to it. One of the sacred duties of every individual is to try to shed a few rays of sunshine into the lives of others. —Punxsutawney Spirit.

They may be rare, yet there are brave, sympathetic souls who go through life scattering sunshine and fragrance, to whom the present is always the time for action. Such people have found the real secret of happiness. Out of a heart overflowing with kindly impulse, throbbing with the consciousness of the brotherhood of man, these souls obey the impulse of the Divine in themselves, and the wedding feast is gay, happier, because they are there; their presence cools life's fever of ambition, haste and greed. In their presence the tongue of slander, misrepresentation, pique, is silent, because they speak an unknown language. The grave is but the body's receptacle, so clearly do they see above it, while the strangers who meet them in life's journeyings feel their hearts burn within them with new love, new sympathies, new experiences. Never to them is the neglected opportunity. What man thinks of them is never their standard of action, but ever present before them is the measure of God's trust by the blessings and opportunities life gives them.

Some one with a practical turn of mind has said, "Their can be no religion without soap." This no doubt agrees with the oft repeated maxim that "Cleanliness is next to Godliness." Mr. Spurgeon says, "To keep debt, dirt and the devil out of my cottage has been my greatest wish ever since I set up housekeeping." This alliterative trinity of evils needs to be carefully guarded against. "A man who is in debt is a slave-tolling to meet the demands of another. He cannot call what he possesses his own. He had better a great deal have less, and owe no man anything," according to the apostolic injunction, than to have large possessions for which he is responsible, but which in whole or in part belong to another. A man in debt is like a person overboard, with a great weight about his neck, with which, by great exertion, he may reach the shore, but which, nevertheless, may sink him at any moment. But whatever excuse may be made for men going into debt, surely none can be made for their living in dirt. Soap and water are cheap, and brushes and brooms are not very expensive."

It is Said

That a number of people would rather borrow a paper than pay for one.

That THE STAR is the paper that gives all the local news. Subscribe.

That very few men are as attentive to their wives as they are to their whiskers.

That a man no sooner gets a pair of shoes broken in than they begin to break out.

That there are a few people in Reynoldsville who do nothing but "gad" the streets.

That for actual discomfort, disappointment in love is nothing compared to tight shoes.

That the man who has never been ashamed of himself has never been well introduced to himself.

That there must be quite a number of angels in Reynoldsville considering the number of "angel cakes" baked in this town.

That when the postoffice is crowded with people waiting until the mail is distributed is a good place for a fool to make himself known.

That a mean man will do most anything to beat a neighbor, but you never heard of a man mean enough to beat a neighbor's carpet.

That if the angels in heaven are anything like those on earth the "silver lining" to the clouds was long ago made into souvenir spoons.

Must be Nominated.

[Brookville Republican.]

Under the Baker election law boroughs and townships must make nominations for officers to be elected at the February election. The borough and township auditors will see to having the tickets printed. In boroughs all nominations must be certified to the auditors at least five days before the election and the township seven days before. The tickets will all be printed on one sheet the same as the tickets for the general election.

"When your heart is bad, and your head is bad, and your bad clean through, what is needed?" ask a Sunday-school teacher of her class. "I know—Ayer's Sarsaparilla," spoke up a little girl, whose mother had recently been restored to health by that medicine.
