A CONDUCTOR'S STORY

MONEY COULDN'T STOP THE TRAIN. BUT IT WAS STOPPED.

There's a Grave Somewhere at the Foot of the Long Range of White Capped Mountains Over Which the Trains of the Great Northern Crank

I never read or hear of the mountains that I do not recall a story told by a conductor of a train on the Great Northern We were going to Butte. train had just crossed the river at Great Falls. From that point the road begins its eastern ascent of the range wh tops are whitened with the snow all the year round. A wide plain spreads out between the line of the road and the range. As the train was getting "a fresh hold on the rails," as one of the party expressed it, the conductor stood on the platform of the coach and booked steadfastly at one spot until it was lost. "Got a claim anywhere around there?"

asked a traveler who had noticed the conductor's longing look. "A kinder of a claim," he replied, "but not the kind you're thinkin of.

How he came to tell us makes no difference now. Here is what he told: "Bout a year ago, I think it was, a young man was put on my train by the conductor who had brought him to where I take it. He had been east. His folks fived down there, I believe. He had been west a good many years, was a cowboy, then a deputy marshal, then a boss of a ranch and then he got to speculatin in Anaconda. He had lived the sort of life out here that a man was expected to live in them days. He was a hard citizen and then a good one. Blest if I know just where he quit off, but he did He finally got to lovin a girl, and just when he was havin it the wist way she ups and marries a good for nothin dude that came out here and got to clerkin in a ragbouse. Then the young man that I am talkin about he goes cast to wear out his feelin's, I reekon. And he was gone all summer. They said he was at the senside, 1 thought when 1 heard that as how he would not last long. When a man quits this climate to go to the seaside, there must be something mighty bad about his case. If a man can' get curst here, he needn't go anywhere else

Well, when he was put in my care there was four or five of the boys with him. They had heerd he was comin back, and they met him away down this side of St. Paul. And they nursed him all the way and fed him jest as if he had been a sick girl. He was lookin out of the winder of the car all the time, day and night, but wasn't sayin nothin. When we got to Great Falls, he looked out of the car winder and smiled. It was the first time that the boys had see him do that since they met him, and they thought he was gettin well. He asked 'em to set him up in his berth so he could

'And he looked at the mountain tops out there covered with the whiteness of God, and the foot of the mountains that is washed by the purest water this side of the divide. The train was just get-ting a good bolt on the rails when the poor fellow sank back, and the next thing I see the boys was takin the piller out from under his head. Then 1 knowed it was all over. Then one of the boys come to me and asked me if I would take $1,000 to stop the train. I told 'em I couldn't do anything of thet sort. They said money was no object. Then I asked 'em what was up, and one of 'em told me that he, meanin the dead man, had made a last request that he be taken from the train and buried in sight of the mountain that had the snow on it, the one that caught his eyes first after we had come over the river. They said they had promised him they would. I asked em where they would get a box, and said a man as good as he was didn't need no box: that the angels would take care of him as soon as he was laid away. "I asked 'em what they would do if the train wasn't stopped. They held a short parley and said in a most respectful way, which I understood, that they had to carry out the wishes of the de ceased at all hazards; that they could stop the train if I didn't. I understood I pulled the cord and went for ard, and while the engineer was mendin the locomotive, which got out of sorts jest then, the funeral procession moved out, and the dead was buried out there in full sight. It so happened that we got the locomotive fixed just as the funeral was over, and we took the pallbearers into Butte that night. "And I never pass that spot that I don't look out there where they laid him. I ain t never seen any of the pallbearers since, and I don't know the name of the young man that they buried. Do you know, gents, that his grave is green all the year round? I once thought of puttin up a gravestone at the head, but, thinks I, it's none of my business, and, besides, the boys said the angels was goin to to take care of his body, so I thought wouldn't be intrudin on any angel's business. It was the only time, though, that my locomotive ever got anything the matter with it."-Chicago Tribune.

Chased With a Mouthful. Captain Bendire, a well known ornithologist, was riding along the banks of Rillitto creek, Arizona, when he saw a big black hawk. He followed the flying bird and at length came up with it. perched on a dead limb of a cottonwood ree. A bulky nest was in a fork of the tree about 40 feet from the ground. The mate of the hawk which the captain had been following was sitting on the nest.

Hoping to secure a trophy, Captain Bendire elimibed up to the next, in which he found a single pale blue erg. The parent birds circled around manifesting their anger at the intrusion by shrill reams, but the captain took the egg. He put it in his month for safe keeping as he required both hands in his descent. Suddenly from his elevated perch he caught sight of several Apache Indians crouched in a small canyon about 80 yards distant. They were evidently watching him. He was awake to his danger in an instant, but he munifested no signs of alarm and descended to the ground in a leisurely manner. Had the Indians perceived that they were discovered, they would have been waiting for the egg hunter at the foot of the tree,

As it was the captain reached the ground, mounted his horse and started on a gallop for the camp, five miles distant.

In a moment the Apaches broke cover and pursued. They chused him nearly to the camp, but he reached it in safety, the egg still in his mouth. It was unbroken. Owing to its large size the captain had difficulty in removing it from his mouth without injuring it. His jaws ached for some time afterward. -- Youth's Companion.

The New and the Benutiful.

"That is the most peculiar and astounding faculty of the mind that calls the new, the beautiful," said Charles Truax. "Now, just think a minute. Look at the change in fashions, and then you see it perfectly. The hat that you wore last source—the one with the still rim and soft crown-how nice and nobby it looked then? Now, when you tried it on again the other day, accidentally run-ning across it in the locker, why, it looked hideous, didn't it? It's impossible to define why this is so. You can't say it is because the mind dislikes old things (some minds don't) nor that all minds love the new, the change. It isn't exactly because persons dislike to be odd or out of date, for some take great delight in looking strange and odd.

"Others do not weat the new things first simply to be the first. While I do ot think this sense comes from or guides itself by any one of these influences, yet the sum of them all goes to make up a circle of harmony inside of which one would rather dwell than out. There are a thousand little things that the mind comprehends almost unconsciously and acts accordingly. It is this reflex ac ion of brain work that makes it possible for one to understand why we do these things."--St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Paradox Explained.

Why does not a man weigh a pound more immediately after eating a pound weight of food? A little reflection will readily explain this apparent mystery. During the process of mastication, deglutition, etc., certain muscles are brought into active play, and the exercise of any muscle necessitates a temporary waste of its tissues, and a certain amount of carbon is eliminated and sed off during the course of the meal. This loss, however, is triffing as com-pared with that due to respiration and perspiration, both of which are increased during the various operations of making a meal

The length of time one may take to consume a pound of food makes but little difference to those losses, for if it is eaten leisurely there is but slight inrease of respiration or perspiration whereas if it is hurried through both are abnormally accelerated. Hence by the time the pound is eaten the consumer has lost appreciably in moisture and carbonic acid .- Million.

Criticism of "Cymbeline."

At one of the performances of "Cym-beline" by Modjeska's company one of the audience heard a man behind him may to another, "What is this piece and where did she get it?" "Oh," answered his companion. "something she picked up, I suppose." All this seems less reprehensible when Dr. Johnson's criticism of "Cymbeline" is recalled. To him it sounded like the creation of a lunatic without a single lucid interval.-Chicago Herald.

The Evolution of Names

The evolution of names from foreign tongues into English is in many cases From the German Bauer to the English Bowers, and from the French Boulanger to the English Bullinger is but a step, as it were. But there are no people who are oftener more numorously accused of altering their names than the Irish. Thus, Crehan has become Rehan; Carroll. #### The Expansion of Solid Hodies.

An ingenious instrument for measuring the expansion of minute solid bodies is found in the list of inventions. The substance is placed in the field of a microscope and an image of it magnified several times is thrown on a screen. This image is further magnified by two micrometer microscopes which accurately determine the expansion. substance is heated in a little platinum oven through which an electric current s, and the temperature of the oven is arrived at by observations on the melting of standard substances. By the use of this instrument the thermal expansion of any substance even to the smallest diamond can be determined until the temperature of combustion is reached.-Exchange.
