"My son, observe the postage stamp; its usefulness depends upon its ability to stick to one thing until it gets there. Consider this and be wise?"

The Republican political breeze seems to be blowing favorably for General Hastings, of Center county, as Republican candidate for governor of Pennsylvania.

To revenge a wrong is easy, usual and natural, and, as the world thinks, savors of nobleness of mind; but religion teaches the contrary, and tells us it is better to neglect than to requite it.

Rev. Dr. Talmage, who finds the Brooklyn Tabernacle too much of an elephant to carry, says he will positively resign. He will ask the Presbytery at the spring meeting to dissolve his pastoral relations. The Divine says he has expended all the nervous energy he has to spare on financial questions. He wants to keep his health to preach the gospel.

Prettiness is always coupled with simplicity; it is incompatible with that which is large; a tall woman with masculine features cannot be pretty. Beauty is peculiarly a female perfection; in the male sex it is rather a defect; a man can scarcely be beautiful without losing his manly character—boldness, energy of mind, strength and robustness of limb; but though a man may not be pretty or beautiful, he may be handsome or fine. A woman is fine who, with striking figure, unites shape and symmetry; a woman is handsome who has good features, and pretty if, with symmetry of features, there is delicacy.

There are within the range of every one's life processes of life which must be solitary, passages of duty which throw one absolutely upon his individual moral forces, and admit of no aid whatever from another. The sense of right can more readily indurate the tender than melt the rocky soul, and that is the most finished character which begins in beauty and ends in power; that leans on the love of kindred while it may, and when it may not can stand erect in the love of God; that shelters itself amid the domesticities of life while duty wills, and when it forbids can go forth under the expanse of immortality, and face any storm that beats, and traverse any wilderness that lies beneath that canopy.

Wundt regards most dream representations as real representations, since they emanate from sensorial impressions, which, though weak, continue during sleep. An inconvenient position during sleep causes the representations of painful work, perilous ascent of a mountain, etc. A slight intercostal pain becomes the point of an enemy's dagger, or the bite of an enraged dog. Difficulty of respiration is fearful agony caused by nightmare, seeming to be a weight rolled upon the chest, or a horrible monster which threatens to stifle the sleeper. An involuntary extension of the foot is a fall from the dizzy height of a tower. Flying is suggested by the rhythmic movements of respiration. Further, "those subjective visual and auditory sensations which are represented in a waking state as a luminous chaos of an obscure visual field, by humming and roaring in the ears, and especially subjective retinal sensations, have an essential role," according to Wundt. "There are shown to us innumerable birds, butterflies, fish, multi-colored pears, flowers, etc. But if there be some cutaneous irritation, these visions are usually changed into caterpillars or beetles crawling over the skin of the sleeper." The sleeper sometimes dreams of his appearing on the street or in society only half dressed; the innocent cause is found in some of the bed-clothes having fallen off. An inconvenient position of the sleeper, a slight hindrance to respiration, or interference with the action of the heart, may be the cause of dreams where one seeks an object without being able to find it, or has forgotten something in starting on a journey. The movements of respiration may suggest to the sleeper, as previously mentioned, flying, but this flight may be objective, and instead of himself flying he sees an angel descending from the heavens, or a luminous chaos where birds are swiftly moving. "The representation of dreams having sensorial origin may have mingled with them those which arise solely from the reproduction of past memories. Parents or friends cut off in the dower of life ordinarily appear in dreams, because of the profound impression which their death or burial has made hence, the general opinion that the dead continue during the night their intercourse with the living."

Common Sense.

Says a gentleman of culture: "We envy neither the men nor the women who cannot speak to a fellow-creature out of their own circle without the formality of an introduction. There is no computing the amount of profit as well as pleasure such persons lose by hedging themselves in with this stupid fence of fastidiousness. We have always found more of this feeling among persons who were more touchy on their social position than among those self-respecting persons who thought nothing about it. A great deal of intelligence is floating round the world without being labeled, and those men or women who have the good sense to recognize this fact; and act upon it not only are educating themselves, but conferring that pleasure which we are all bound by the common ties of humanity to exchange with one another. It seems to us that it is only the snob and pretender who take a different view of this question."

Life is a Lottery, Perhaps.

But you can't afford to take any chances when you're sick. Don't let the druggist enrich himself at your expense. Lookout for impure drugs. They are cheaper, of course,—for the druggist—but how about you? Then again, how about accuracy and skill in compounding your prescription? That counts for something too, don't it? We pride ourselves on combining all these features.

Vile Poison.

Every boy and every young man should leave the deadly cigarette alone. You can not find a cigarette for sale that does not contain opium. A writer puts the matter very forcibly by saying that a boy or man might about as well take a pistol and blow out his brains as to allow self-indulgence to make him the slave of this horrible drug. The opium victim is one of the most hopeless and helpless persons on the face of the earth. No wonder that physicians, educators, and sensible people in general, warn and plead with young men to leave untouched these vile poisons.—Big Run Echo.

About

Prescriptions.

The best of medicines are none too good for sick folks. It's bad enough to be sick without running chances with second grade drugs. That's the reason we buy only the very highest quality of everything. It's a great satisfaction to us to know that every prescription we send out is just as good as drugs will make it. No matter what you paid for it you couldn't get it better.
