The Came of Brag as Overheard in Pletelan Tompkins Square,

On one of the seats four little girls ing in the feminine—masculine, also were observed the other day indulg--propensity for quarreiing. The most self-assertive of the group was a diminutive damsel whose head was adorned with a hat of monstrous red plumage. Sarcastic comments on her part had evidently irritated her companions:

"She's a sassy thing, Sally. I wouldn't speak to her no more," observed a young miss on the right.

Grisly Legislation.

Two most extraordinary bills were introduced in the Ohio Legislature. The first bill provided for the abolishment of hanging as a penalty in cases of capital punishment, and substituted the use of anaesthetics and vivisection. The murderer was to be turned over to the doctors, who would deprive him of consciousness by the use of anæsthics and then experiment with him to their hearts' The other bill was similar to the first, but less radical, and gave the murderer the choice between death by electricity and death by anasthetics and vivisection.

The fire was discovered at 2.20 o'clock, The fire was discovered at 2.20 o clock. A number of men who were sleeping in the Knox building were awakened by smoke. They found the entire rear of the second floor of the building in flames, and had hardly time to escape with their lives. Before they had left the building the blaze had communicated to the three-story rear part of the Adams stables, and was darting out of the windows of the second and first floors of both buildings in the rear. A general alarm was turned in and the entire fire department of the city was on hand in short order.

Every company and every fireman was needed. A hotter fire never raged. Finmes poured in great sheets from the doors and windows of the great stables. All this was in a very few moments.

windows of the great stables. All this was in a very few moments.

A hundred men ran into the Adams stables and cut loose the 150 horses they contained. The animals were cut loose and turned into the street. The horses of the Knox company could not be reached. They were on the second story of the building, which was a seething mass of flames from the very start. The most of them must have perjished from the terrific heat and from the dense smoke before the flames reached them.

The Knox building was a four-story structure of brick. On the first floor were the heavy wagons of the concern; on the second floor the horses; on the third and fourth floors hay in large quantities and merchandise of all kinds which had been stored with the company.

of all kinds which had been stored with the company.

Another four-story building of the Knox company facing on Second street and connecting with the stables, separated only by a thin brick wall, was used entirely for storage purposes. It was was packed from basement to roof with furniture and merchandise. Families had stored their entire household belongings here; merchants had left carloads of supplies here, and there was load after load of incoming and outgoing freight. It is in this building that the greatest loss occurred. The insurance cannot begin to cover it.

Just before 3 o'clock the most terrible incident of the fire occurred. The firemen had carried their hose into the burning warehouse through one of the large rear doors. This door was held up by weighted ropes, and the men had just entered the building when the ropes burned through and the heavy wooden door fell, penning them in. The work of cutting through the door was immediately began, and was all but finished when the floors above fell with a crash. The immense weight burst out the door and crushed two of the firemen to death. The others were with difficulty dragged out of the debris alive. In about five minutes the portion of the outside wall immediately over the door gave way, filling the wide alley but injuring no one. Massive iron girders over the door held, leaving the doorway almost clear. In this clearing, lying on his face, his head and right arm exposed, lay Assistant Foreman Mastin. A 12-inch beam lying across his shoulder had crushed out his life and now held him pinned to the ground. It was not until all the toppling walls around had fallen an hour later that his body could be extricated. The great beam had to be chopped away from over the body before it could be removed. Just before 3 o'clock the most terrible inci-

"Of all the inhabitants of the great rivers of India the alligator is the most formidable," said Captain L. E. some time we came to the river bank, and a short distance away saw a dead alligator lying on the shore with its great jaws extended to their utmost. On examining it to discover the cause of so strange an appearance we found to our horror that it had devoured the missing boy, and had attempted to swallow his head whole. This, however, it was unable to do, and had been suffocated in the attempt. The boy's head was still covered by his turban, which, when removed, disclosed the answer to his mistress' letter, which he was faithfully bringing back. It was supthe river he had been seized by the alligator, as those huge reptiles are very clever in concealing themselves antil their victim is well within their reach, and then pouncing on their prey."
