How the old country store used to be laughed at! The idea that people should

The extent to which the country store idea is carried out in the cities is impressed upon us every once in a while in a general way, but few of us appreciate that extent when it comes down to particulars. The book trade has undoubtedly suffered the most from the bargain counter. A city of the stand-ing and culture of Springfield, Mass.,

has no longer any book store. The last one has succumbed to the rivalry of the dry goods store. Not long ago there were complaints that the dry goods offering "bargains" induces the city dry goods shop to become a country

MINERS DECIDE TO STAY OUT

Until They Get 69 Cents or are Hope lessly Beaten.

The Pennsylvania coal miners' strike has developed into a finish fight-a condition the conservative ones among both the operators and miners had hoped would be avoided. The miners' convention Monday decided to continue the strike for 6) cents a ton, and mapped out an aggressive campaign. The mapped out an aggressive campaign. The men at work for 69 cents have paid the assessment of 7 cents a ton imposed by the convention of March 6, and agreed to make regular payments. The decision to continue the strike was not arrived at until all the river mines reported being ready to pay up this assessment.

The adjournment of Saturday afternoon was made to give the delegates and their constituents a chance to talk the situation over, and revise instructions. The weak spot all along was the river mines, where 69 cents is being paid, but where the miners refused to pay the relief assessment. The continuation of the strike depended upon those men, and when the river delegates returned with instructions for 69 cents and money for the relief of idle men, the decision was made.

with instructions for scents and including to the relief of idle men, the decision was made.

The action of the operators in refusing to meet in conference also had an influence in deciding the men. The operators say it is impossible to pay more than 60 cents. A number say they held off starting until the adjournment of the convention, to avoid stirring up trouble, but now the start will be made at once. The miners say they expect a fight, but are better prepared for it than at any time and will stay out to the last extremity. Delegates to the convention said that if the operators tried to work with new men they would try to stop them. The miners declined to say how much money was turned in by the delinquents, but asserted it was sufficient to conduct the strike. It is said to have approximated $5,000, which will be the weekly total.

Information has been received that a meeting of the southern and western rolling mill men, representing 87 per cent, of the total output, has just been had and it decided to steadily advance prices, which will average 10 per cent. IRON AND COKE

Some Prospects of a General Improvement in the Trade.

The "Iron Age", New York, publishes the following: Those outside of the iron trade seem to know more of an advance in prices than the majority connected with the industry. The feeling is undoubtedly better, but try. The feeling is undoubtedly better, but the newly acquired strength is not yet herculean. We have beard very little of record breaking prices during the last month, and that is a proof of improvement. The reason why higher cost brought about by dearer raw material has not been reflected by correspondingly better figures for finished goods, is that the majority of producers are still working on cheap materials and are giving their advantage away. Apparently, furnace men are resisting vigorously the higher prices for coke, but even if the makers do not at once secure all they ask for they are not at once secure all they ask for they are sure to obtain a good raise above the starva-tion level of the last year.

BATTLE IN A MINE.

Huns and Poles Quarrel Over a Load of Coal-Two Men May Die.

A flerce fight took place in the Anchor mines, near Dunbar, Pa., between Hungar-tans and Polanders, in which two men were probably fatally injured. John Spolo, a Polander, and Mike Melik, a Hungarian, quarreled over a load of coal. Each had dug four loads, and there was another which both claimed. When they returned to work each vowed that the other should not get the coal, and they stood guard over it with their pick on their shoulders. The friends of each of the men gathered around them to the number of ten or twelve, and awaited the conflict which they saw was enevitable. At last Spolo attempted to run the car out, and the Huns sprang upon him.

All were armed with pick handles, and used them freely. Spolo was knocked down and boaten into insensibility. A Hun was also knocked senseless, and nearly every member of both parties was injured. To make matters were the lights were extinguished in the early part of the fray, and the combatants were left in total darkness. They were unable to distinguish friend from foe. JAPANESE WRESTLING MATCH.

Description of a Homeric Struggle in These wrestling contests take place in a huge amphitheater, much like a large circus, sheltered by a bamboo framework covered with matting to keep out the people who do not pay to go in. The top is unroofed. Tiers of boxes of a primitive description line the front. A ring of rice bags incloses the sanded arena, some dozen feet in diameter, in which the combatants meet. The center is occupied by the umpire, a person of much distinction, dressed in an old brocade costume, picturesque enough to Europeans and reminiscent of feudal times. Four judges, according to Current Literature, are also in attendance in case the umpire's decision should be disputed. The umpire stretches out his fan and shouts something in a strident voice. At his behest the first couple of combatants appear. The dress is scarcely conventional, according to occidental ideas. Indeed, there is practically no dress at all. Beyond a strip round the lions, absolutely nothing is worn. They stride into the ring amid the plaudits of thousands, take a draught of water from a bucket in the corner, sprinkle themselves with the fluid, and are ready for the encounter. Two mighty men are they, with limbs and trunks that would not disgrace Samson. Mountains of muscle some, others mountains of fat. Good humor gleams in their faces. They slap their thighs, and stamp their legs like restive horses, and then crouch ready for the spring, like beasts of prey. The umpire gives the signal to commence and they bound into each other's embrace. Perhaps the feint a parried. so that we have it all over again. It is a Homeric moment as the champions struggle and sway this way and that, until, with a final effort, one is thrown to the ground. In one instance a heavy man was hurled right over the rice bags by a wiry opponent and would have had a nasty fall off the stage but for the intervention of an attendant placed ready to prevent accidents.
