Its Relation to Society and Its Influence

The unit of society is the home. Encollment that assumes to be thorough is not a registration by individuals, but by families. If we were to say that the structure of society is cellular, we should have to say that it is the family that constitutes each separate cell. No man, however entire, is a cell. No woman, however complete, is a cell. There is no finished cell except in the grouping of several individuals bound by the ties of domesticity. A bachelor is a dislocated fragment. His female counterpart is in the same category. It may not be their fault. It may lie in the necessity of their case. Still, all in all, it is a condition foreign to divine in-

It is to the family, therefore, that we shall have to look as being the prime point of concern in all that relates to the weal of our times and our kind. The strength and health of society are to be measured by the amount of affectionate emphasis that is laid on the home idea, and the wholesomeness of nome idea, and the wholesomeness society is simply the sanctity of the home writ large. Homes are each of them the separate roots that carry their several contributions to the organized structure of the general life.

All of this holds whether society be considered in its religious relations, which we know as the church, or in its secular ones, known as the state. The home is the first church, and the home is the first state. There is nothing in either of the two that is not initially present in a small way inside the home circle. As regards the former there is a very important idea conserved in so arranging our church auditoriums as to combine the congregation without sacrificing the identity of its families. The pew system of worship is the deft way that our church architecture takes to teach the doctrine that each home is a litte religious organism. This is one of those interesting cases where a sense of fitness, even without being distinctly conscious of it, nevertheless asserts itself and creates a very substantial ex-pression of itself. And there is no preacher-at least there is no pastorwho does not carry distinctly in his head, and particularly in his heart, this cellular structure of his congregation and does not feel that the significance of his congregation depends not on the number of its individuals, but on the number of its families. - Rev. C. H. Parkhurst in Ladies' Home Journal.

A DISLIKE OF DUKES.

A Handleap Which the Highest of Eng-lish Peers Have to Carry.

We may note a peculiarity in the English feeling about titles of which English feeling about titles of which we have never seen a reasonable explanation. The political populace dislikes the title of duke. Some of the ablest peers in politics have been dukes, but to be a duke weights instead of lightening a man in the great race for power. There is a widely diffused impression, the origin of which we cannot trace, that a duke is sure to be a little stupid, that a brilliant duke is, in fact, an impossibility. The title is a positive drawback to the Duke of Devonshire, and a Duke of Derby would never have been Duke of Derby would never have been described as a "Rupert of debate."

The Duke of Argyll, who is an intel-lectual athlete, would have been far more completely recognized as Earl of Argyll, and we are not sure that the dukedom has not impeded one or two promising politicians in the house of lords. Certainly a duke rarely rises there unless he has become known to the country before the title crushed him. Is it that the rank overpowers the popular imagination till men cease to see the person—a thing which constantly happens in the case of kings—or is it that men can never forget the special rank by merging it in the simpler and more familiar title of "lord?"

No peer except a duke is invariably tioned by the title which marks his grade. We have not an idea of the true explanation, but we know that a poli-ical earl who accepted a dukedom would lose heavily in popular estimation, and that even a marquis like Lord Salis-bury, who would alter his rank so lit-tle, would find that the coronet of tle, would find that the coronet of strawbenzy leaves acted, to a certain extent, as an extinguisher, while if his son never entered the house of commons he would have to struggle against some inexplicable weight. The fact is one of the very oddest in the whole of the odd history of the influence of rank, but of its reality we entertain no doubt whatever. To say "that is a ducal opinion" is to say it is an opinion that no one in our days need consider.—London Spectator.

Throws Away the Chances When an American heiress marries a count, she has no show of over being anything higher than a countess, but if she marries a bright young American she may some day be the wife of the president of the United States.—Boston Hapbarard Preaching

A clergyman in Cushing, Me., is reported to have a unique way of securing texts. He passed around slips of paper, upon which the people wrote various texts that they would like to hear preached from. He then passed around a hat and gathered up the slips and asked a young lady present to choose one without looking. She drew forth the text, "What think ye?" upon which he preached, according to report, a very excellent sermon. This method is certainly unique, but we admit an old fashioned preference for a text selected early ported to have a unique way of securing ioned preference for a text selected early in the week and several days of careful thought and study devoted to the discourse preached upon it. -Augusta (Ga.)

"A Nice Pupil!"

Napoleon was a great soldier, but he could not spell. His handwriting was also so bad as to give rise to the rumor that he used undecipherable characters to conceal the fact that he, the master of Europe, could not master French orthography.

In the early days of the empire a man of modest aspect presented himself before the emperor.

Who are you?" asked Napoleon. 'Sire, I had the honor at Brienne for 15 months to give writing lessons to your majesty.

"You turned out a nice pupil!" said the emperor, with vivacity. "I congrat-ulate you on your success!" Neverthe-less he conferred a pension upon his old master. - Youth's Companion.
