The Langhorne Standard says the eleventh commandment should read about as follows: "Mind your own business."

During leap year the woman claims the right of initial, and the man has the right of referendum. It is the reverse of this in other years.—Ex.

From the DuBois Courier of Monday we learn that the Bell, Lewis & Yates C. M. Co. will make quite extensive improvements at the Rochester mine, which is located near DuBois, by building a large mule barn, blacksmith shop and powder house near the new opening. The company already have three large pumps in operation at the Rochester mine of a combined capacity of from 15,000 to 18,000 gallons per minute, yet in a very wet season this is not sufficient, and another large Jeannville pump is to be put in at that place.

The Oil City Derrick offers the following sensible advice to church goers: "Having entered a pew, move along; do not block up the end of the pew as if you did not intend to have anybody else enter it, or as if you were holding it for some special friends. Do not rise to let others in, but move along and leave the pew invitingly open, so that they will know that they are welcome. If a pew holding six has already five in it, do not file out in formal procession to let one poor, scared woman go to the other end next to the aisle. It is not necessary for stalwart men to sit at the end ready to rush out and kill Indians, as possibly it was once."

In The Youth's Companion for April 23rd Andrew Carnegie tells how he served his apprenticeship as a business man. In an article which will prove stimulating to every boy and stirring to every friend of boys. Mr. Carnegie started in life as so many other successful men have done, without a penny; and has amassed a great fortune, which has been wisely and generously drawn upon for scores of public purposes, designed to benefit his fellowmen. In this article he has told the story of his early struggles and successes in a delightful manner, which will make his paper an inspiration to every boy who reads it.

"The girl who works—God bless her," says an exchange. She is brave and active; she is not too proud to earn her own living; she is not ashamed to be found at her daily task; she is studious, painstaking and patient; she smiles from behind the counter or desk; her smile is the reflection of celestial grandeur and eternal bliss; she is like a beautiful mountaineer; her character is pure as the bubbling spring, strong as the rock from which it flows and as high as the mountain topmost pinnacle. The sight of her should be a fine inspiration for us all. Her hand may be stained by dishwashing, sweeping, factory grease, or printer's ink, but it is an honest and helping hand; it stays misfortune from many homes; it is one shield that protects many a forlorn little family from the asylum. All honor to the girl that works.

On Monday of last week the Pennsylvania railroad celebrated its fiftieth anniversary. The following morning the Philadelphia Times contained an interesting history of the road, an account of the anniversary and pictures of the leading officials and directors of the road. From the same issue of the Times we clip the following: "The imposing gathering at the Academy of Music yesterday to commemorate the rounded half century of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, will stand in the annals of the state as one of the notable landmarks of Pennsylvania's progress. Few people at this day who see the most complete railroad organization of the world presented by the great Pennsylvania corporation, unsurpassed if even equaled by any great railroad corporation of any country in the completeness of its always conservative yet liberally advancing methods, can have any just conception of the desperate and often almost despairing struggles made half a century ago to inaugurate this beneficent system of travel and traffic. There was eminent fitness, therefore, in calling to the front in the commemorative proceedings of yesterday the very few survivors who took part in the early struggles of the establishment of the corporation, and to hear from those most thoroughly familiar with the operations of the company today, the story of the marvelous growth that has been uninterrupted for a full half century."
