He sent up his card, and was conducted to the room where the Randolphs, father and son, were. The latter was walking up and down the floor, while the former stood with his back to the fire, looking as high shouldered and dignified as possible.

"I am here," said Wallie pleasantly, after the formalities were over, "unof-ficially, on behalf of the lady who has been singing the past season under the pame of Mile, Marana.

'Mr. Dinsmore," said Randolph, Sr., twisting his eyebrow sternly, "you are perhaps not aware that the lady is under my especial charge."

"I have known for some months that she is your daughter, Mr. Randolph, but no one is aware that she is under your especial charge.

"I do not understand you, sir!" said Mr. Randolph fiercely, "You told me several weeks ago, in the presence of my friend Bellingham, who remembers it, that you had but the slightest acquaintance with her. And your charge of her has amounted to so little that she has today come to me, who had no right to expect such an honor, for counsel and protection.

This was said quietly, but with a certain warmth and emphasis that abashed Mr. Randolph a good deal. He turned red, and opened his mouth once or twice. as though to speak, but no words came.

Hereupon Edward Randolph put in his oar. "Whatever may have been my sister's position before my arrival, sir," said he. "it's another thing now. I'll look out for her."

"If you do it will be but a tardy re turn for the services she has rendered you during the last few months," re-turned Wallie, with a peculiar brightness in his gray eyes.

"I don't recognize your right to med-dle in our family affairs," cried Ed angrily. "Your family affairs are liable to be public property before long. I intend for the sake of Miss Randolph to prevent it if possible," said Wallie composedly.

"Perhaps Mr. Dinsmore will explain himself," suggested Randolph, senier, in a less defiant tone.

"I wish to find out from you, before resorting to other means, whether Mile. Marana means to take measures to assert any rights she may believe herself to have in this matter," answered Wallie, fixing his eyes on Ed.

Ed looked at his father, but made no reply.
"And in case she does," Wallie re-mmed, "I wish to know whether you, Mr. Edward, intend to act with her or against her?"

"He will act against her; I will answer for that!" put in Randolph, senior. with decision.

"I prefer to answer for myself, sir!" retorted Ed, frowning upon his parent. "Answer for yourself, sir?" repeated the older gentleman excitedly. "You'll have enough to answer for then, I can assure you! You will have to answer for the fortune that you have dissipated. sir-a fortune which belonged to you no more than it does to this gentleman here present. Where would you be, I should like to knew, if your sister-rour sister, who had never before been out of her father's house—had not paid your dissolute debts with the money which she earned with her own hands—voice, I mean—sirf How is a good for nothing fellow who robs his father of money to spend on a loose woman, and lets himself be supported by his sister"——

"Father, Mile. Marana is not"—— "Hold your tongue, sir! Never mind what Mile. Marana is not; I and every-body else know what she is! And you stand there before me a beggar, without a cent in your pocket, except what your mistress may have had the compassion slander that lady," called out young Mr. Randolph, in a white heat of wrath. "She is a lady, every inch of her. Whoever says the contrary lies! You may revile me all you like-I'll not say a word; though, as Mr. Dinsmore here told you, you abandoned my sister to the insults of all the blackguards in town, for the sake of the money she was putting into your pecket. Mr. Dinsmore," he added, turning to that personage, "you are a gentleman and l'i speak to you. You see how I stand. and you can't wish me to feel more humiliated than I do. I love my sister-God knows it—in spite of all the trouble I've brought on her. She has replaced the money I spent, and not a cent of it will I ever touch, if I have to starve in the streets. But when I found on landing in New York today that it was my sister who had been taking Mile. Marana's place, I knew I was done for. The two women in this world whom I love and honor, by George! are set against each other, and I who would defend either of 'em with my life, can do nothing. After punishment like that, it's not your shricking and stamping that can make e feel any worse," he said, looking his father in the face.

At this point Wallie thought the time was come to interpose. He had less sympathy with the father than with the son, whose chief crime, after all, seemed to be that he had lost his head and his sense of personal responsibility for love's sake. It was no more than justice that both of them should be arraigned for their behavior, and it was poetical justice that the arraignment of each should come from the other. But it had gone far enough, and was not in itself agree able for a third person to listen to.

"I think the best thing to do," he said, "is to go to Mile. Marana at once and learn how she feels about it. The matter may perhaps be arranged quietly If you'll come with me, Mr. Edward we'll do what we can."

"All right," returned Ed, whose fit of rage had left him in a very depressed and tractable state. "I'll do whatever you advise." "And I wash my hands of you, sir! exclaimed Randolph, Sr., to his son, as the latter moved toward the door. But Ed took no notice of this farewell shot, and he remained pretty much silent all the way down to the Albemarle, where they presently found themselves in the private sitting room of Mrs. Peters, as she still preferred to call herself. She had been sitting at the piano, but as the gentlemen entered she rose and came to meet them. "I have the memory of meeting you before," she said to Wallie, as she gave him her hand, whose softness contrasted with the bright hardness of the jeweled rings she wore. She looked at Ed, but made no remark to him.

"I had given up the hope of seeing you this season, Diva," observed Wallie, with "You drove Gen. Inigo to his wit's end."

That would be farther than I would like to go myself," she replied quietly. "I think he did not stay long there himseif." Her beautiful face was calm and quite impenetrable. If she meant mischief, she meant it very deep down. She did not smile, but neither was there any sign of suppressed anger in her tranquil

"It is my fortune to be well acquainted with the lady who has been singing here in your stead," said Wallie, who perceived that it would be useless to beat about the bush with a woman of her caliber and temperament. "As she is the sister of your friend Mr. Randolph.

I hope to see you friends with her also. "It is my way to keep the things of business apart from the things of friendship," returned Marana with the slow distinctness that marked her utterance of English. "Edward," she continued, turning to that unhappy young man.
"M. Dinsmore has your confidence? He knews of your-foolishness, yes?"

"He's all right," asserted the youth.

with a heavy sigh. "Be so good, then, mon cher, to go down stairs a little and smoke your cigar. It is not three who are company," said she, with a certain aroma of tenderness in her tone, which (Wallie fancied) was more involuntary than con-

"Now, monsieur," she continued when they were alone, "after fifteen minutes I await Gen. Inigo. Up till that I am all yours." And she leaned back in her chair and rested one hand within the other in her lap.
"The general will no doubt answer for himself—that is not my affair." said

Wallie. "But I should like to know whether you perceive any distinction be-tween his accountability and that of this young lady?"

"You would say it is his fault, bu" only her misfortune." "To tell you the truth, Diva, the fault seems to me to lie between all three of you, but less belongs to her than to either Inigo or you."

"It is not I who apportion the fault, monsieur; but if I say the truth shall be known then the affair must turn out as

"But you know that the only one to suffer would be the sister of Mr. Ran-

A slight movement of the under lids of Marana's eyes showed that she appreciated the significance of Wallie's paraphrase for her rival. "In our profession, monsieur," she said, shrugging one shoulder and looking aside, "we have the necessity to each defend himself without regard of person."

There are two reasons why people fight—one to inflict injury, and the other to get some advantage for themselves. Is yours the first?"

"Why should you assume it, mon-sleur?" inquired the Russian.

"Because in this case there is no advantage to be derived. And, besides, though I can imagine Mile. Marana wishing to crush a rival, I cannot imagine her condescending to make a question of money."

"I had begun to think that M. Dinsmore was too truthful to make any compliments," said Marana with a leisurely smile that enhanced the beauty of her face. "There may be more respect in what one leaves unsaid than"—— "Ah! I comprehend that also. But—consider it; if I have spent all my life in trying to sing well, and then I find that some one has borrowed my name, so that her singing is thought to be mine-then all that I have done in my life is for nothing. We singers, monsieur, have only our voice: when that is still there is no more of us. If it is taken from us we have nothing left. We put into it all our souls and our hearts, and we work many years—it is work and not play, monsteur and we have many hard things, many druggles, sometimes we lose everything that other persons love, even love itself. Well, you see, I would more gladly give to some lady all the money that I have earned in my life, and my jewels, and my dresses, than I would permit that. when she sings, the audience should say, That is Marana!"

Wallie looked down, and made no

"You have reminded me," she went on after a few moments, "that this lady is the sister of Edward. Yes, he has very often told me of her; and that we were a little alike—poor boy, he means of one aspect, one presentment; as for the rest, he knows of me only what I have been to him. My other history was not of interest to him; perhaps he would not believe it, even if I told it to him: but, at least, he asked me to be his wife, and though I said no it was not because I feared that he might cease to love me because of what he might afterward come to know. You may laugh at it, moneteur, but I think he would still love me, notwithstanding all of it."

There was something noble and touching in the way Marana said this. Wallie did not feel at all inclined to laugh, and his face perhaps showed it.
"I said no," she resumed; "but later, when I found what he had done, I said yes, so that I might help to make right, and also because it is pleasant for a singer like me to think she can give something to her bushand in return for being his wife. But then he would not; in that he was like other men who wish in every way to be the master. But yet, monsieur, there is time to think again." she added, suddenly altering her tone, and looking at him keenly; "a woman has much power over the man who loves her, if she will use it!"

"I do not doubt it at all," said Wallie, meeting her look.

"Do you think I would have power to make him say, 'Well, she is my sister. but she has done what was not just? You shall treat her as if she were any other woman, and I will say nothing; I will help you?" continued the Russian, with a subtle smile.

"I really believe you might," Wallie answered. "But I can't conceive that you would care to have him do it, or care for him if he did do it."

"Ah! but with us singers it can be different," rejoined Marana, bending upon him a gaze of dark, ambiguous brillian-'It is much for us to know, and to cy. prove it to the world, that we are loved beyond measure; yes, beyond honor. It is a triumph, and we love triumphsah! who knows how dearly? Men do at! they can to ruin us, monsieur, and the world laughs and gives us no mercy. Do you not think it might be sweet to make one man your slave, so that he would do your bladding in all things and worship

"Are you so much in need of a triumph of that kind?" demanded Wallie. Now, whether he so intended it or not, Marana evidently interpreted the ques-tion as a covert but bitter satire. She gave a little soft laugh and arose

"At last, then, we understand each other!" she said. "It is much easier so, is it not? You are too clever for me, M. Dinsmore; you are not a man to be de-ceived. Yes, in this world, as the French say, il fant accepter les hommes pour ce qu'ils sont-des moyens! We singers especially must use all things for our protection or profit. Tiens * a drole! Did you think, for your part, you should persuade me to forgive Ma'm'selle Randolph because I make a fool of her brother? Bah! I am a business woman. Business is not sentiment. I think! Enfin, m'sien', I have enjoyed very much the honor of your visit; foi de Marana, vous etes ambarsadeur parfaitement accompli! But your little Ma'm'selle Randolph has a future already happy in the protection of a man like you; she will not grudge me the lit-tle that belongs to the true Marana! Au revoir, cher ami!"

And, laughing once more, she gave him her hand with a free gesture, and Wallie bowed over it with a mingling of admiration and vexation such as he was seldom kindled to. He had recognized his mistake the moment after it was irrevocable.

"Well?" said Ed, getting up with a haggard face from his chair in the smok-

"Well," responded Wallie, "there is no doubt about one thing—she is the great Marana! I think you may as well come with me and see your sister." [TO BE CONTINUED]
