planation and thanks, took his sent among the Councilmen:

"Gentiemen, the work of this Council is now closed. When the Council entered upon its duties twelve months ago various plans were formed and introduced which had for their object the correction of certain abuses which existed, in fact reform all along the lines, paramount amongst them being the careful and economical use of public monies, in order to save, it possible, $600.00 as a nucleus to commence paving our streets with brick. The appropriation which was made for borough purposes was no higher than previous years and we expected to show good work and improvements upon our streets, but we reckoned with at our host, for the research what to pay an old order for $400, a debt contracted some years ago for lumber to pave Main street. In addition to that the Sanders and Cameron actions against the borough for damages to the person, which so crippled our finances as to leave us no alternative, but to abandon some plans and make the best of the circumstances we could. We took up the matter of sewerage, which was postponed until spring. A thorough revision of the borough ordinances was found necessary upon investigation, some being found obsolete, some ambigues, some not according to law: that work is now complete and is in the bands of the printer.

"I now wish to express to you my pleasure and gratification for the kindness and courtesy with which you have treated me during the two years I have have had the honor to be president of Council, also for the harmony and good will which have prevailed in your deliberations, also for the unanimous decisions you rendered in the passing of ordinances and other important matters. Many Trials of an Englishman With His Stenographer.

An Englishman who drops his h's and nepirates his a's and a stenographer and typewriter who spells phonetically from dictation make a combination from which trouble is sure to result un less the "copy" is carefully revised. The manager of one of the most important manufacturing plants in Cleveland is an Englishman. Not long ago be employed a young man to act as his stenog-rapher, and one of the first things that the latter was called upon to do was the "t" — down" of a letter to the manage. " who was away at a summer reasoning a busy man, the ten. by halis wife answered it there we rime for the stenogra-pher "I've dear Henry," she wrote, "what we tak do you mean by calling me 'a mand our little Horace me 'L. and our little Horace 'Crit.' I will admit that this sounds like you, but why do you make a joke of it before your employees?"

Of course the fond husband and father didn't know what it all meant, and so be wrote for an explanation, when his first letter was cent back to him.

ne glance at it and be rushed over to his stenographer, excitedly threw the sheet down before him and demanded, "There, what do you mean, sir, by writing mr wife's name down 'An

"At a?" replied the young man.
"Let me see. No, I've got it-Hannah,

"But," said the manager, who was furious, "it's not 'Annah, —— it, Hannal

"Well, there it is, Hannah-H-a-nn-a-b."
"'Annah be dashed!" exclaimed the manager. "A-a-n-a, Hanna! Can't you understand English, you blanked fool?" By this time the stenographer began to see through the trouble, so he begged off upon the plea that having had a swelling in one of his ears be had not been able to hear very well. But it cost him nearly a week's salary to square things with the other boys in the office, and he always deems it best to hide when he hears the manager's wife in the hall.—Cleveland Leader.

A BUSINESS PARABLE.

You Cannot I'mli to Appreciate the Point In This Story.

Once a farmer had 1,800 bushels of wheat, which he sold not to a single grain merchant, but to 1,800 different dealers, a bushel each. A few of them paid him in cash, but far the greater number said it was not convenient then; they would hay later. A few months passed, and the man's bank account ran low. "Hew is this?" be said. "My 1,800 bushels of grain should have kept me in affluence until another crop is raised, but I have parted with the grain and have instead only a vast number of accounts, so small and scattered that I cannot get around and collect fast emough to pay expenses.

So he posted up a public notice and asked all those who ewed him to pay quickly. But few came. The rest said, "Mine is cult a small the rest said," will go and pay one of these days," forgetting that though each account was very small, when all were put together they meant a large sum to the man. Things went on thus. The man got to feeling so badly that he fell out of bed and awoke, and running to his granary found his 1,800 bushels of wheat still safe there. He had only been dreaming.

Moral. -The next day the man went to the publisher of his paper and said:
"Here, sir, is the pay for your paper, and when next year's subscription is dne you can depend on me to pay it promptly. I stood in the position of an editor last night, and I know how it feels to have one's honestly earned money scattered all over the country in small amounts."-Union Signal.

His Alibi.

Once upon a time the late Sir Frank Lockwood, while attending a police court, noticed that the magistrates were performing their duties in a very expeditious manuer, and he commented on the fact to a superintendent of police. "Yes," answered the superintendent, who was pompous and none too well educated, "their worships always dis-penses with justice very fast." Some years ago he got a prisoner off by prov-ing an alibi. Some time afterward the judge met him and said, "Well, Lock-wood, that was a very good alibi." "Yes, my lord," was the answer. "I had three offered me and I think I see had three offered me, and I think I selected the best."

Cruel Retort.

"I have no patience with your democratic sentimentalism," said Miss Elderly with hauteur. "Blood tells, and my ancestors fought in the revolution. Miss Sprightly."

"I suppose you were too young to re-call any incidents of the struggle?"— Detroit Free Press.

Her Mother's Spirit.

A young married woman was obliged to remain alone overnight in a St. Louis hotel a few years ago, her husband being detained by business in a neighboring town. In the dead of night the woman was awakened out of a sound sleep by a tremendous noise in the wardrobe. It was such a sudden and unearthly uproar that the woman, sensible and practical though she was, was frightened. The noise ceased, then returned. The woman jumped up, lighted the gas, looked at her watch and found it was just midnight and made a thorough search both of the wardrobe and the room. There was nothing, so far as the evidence of the senses went which could account for the racket. The woman put out the light and went back to bed. The noise was not repeated either that night or any other.

Six mentles afterward, however, the woman was in San Francisco, and for the first time in her life and solely out of curiosity the attended a spiritualistic meeting. Almost immediately the memixting. Almost immediately the medium, a perfect stranger, turned to her and said, "The spirit of your mother is present, madam, and she says that six months ago (naming the precise date) the tried to communicate with you by means of the wardrobe in the Blank hotel, St. Lunis." The woman's practical good sense did not desert her. "Well, you just tell my mather." she "Well, you just tell my mother," she said, "that the next time she wants to communicate with me not to make such a awful racket in the dead of night and frighten me half out of my senses.

Gentility Passing Away.

A frankness that is almost brutal seems to past current in society for up to date smartness, and the language that is now used by certain fashionable people among themselves is sometimes only a little short of billingsgate, while "swear words" seem to have lost their awfulness and are used almost as freely by women as by men. It is turious how "gentility" both as a word and a quality has disappeared. Fashionable people are distinctly no longer "genteel." They may on occasions be highbred, but the mineing propriety of the boiles and beaus of yore has entirely disappeared. In a well known society novel written 15 or 20 years ago, which was a presumably correct delineation of the manners and habits of the fashionable life of that time, two herolaus play their role—one a Vore de Vere, with the correct speech and manners of her caste, and the other a suddenly exalted bourgeoise, who goes through the social fires of criticism and experience before she emerges true gold from the ordeal. Oddly enough today the types might be reversed; it is the bourgeoise who is "high toned" and the Vere de Vere who is a slangy boiden.—New York Tribune.

Getting Around It.

A worried looking stranger stepped up to a crossing policeman yesterday morning and said:

"Will you kindly direct me to the Matthew, Mark, Luke and John railway depot?"

The stranger repeated his request. "There isn't any such depot in this town." replied the officer. "What are you giving me?"

"That isn't the name of it, of course," rejoined the other, "but it's something like it. My head's all tamgled up this morning, and I can't get anything right."

A sudden thought struck the police.

"Do you mean the Big Four depot?"

he asked.
"That's it!" exclaimed the stranger delightedly. "I was sure I'd know it if I heard it again. Where is it?"

The officer started him in the right direction and then went into a brown study. At the end of half an hour he emerged from it and said to himself in an audible voice:

"I wonder if that guy wasn't having fun with me."—Chicago Tribune.

A Pleasant Sort of Sea.

The power of the surf is a thing about which many of us have but the most hazy ideas, and indeed the ordinary conditions with which we are surrounded prevent us from fully appreciating what it can be at times.

The people of the island of Chinco-teague, which is about a mile and a half wide, have, however, opportunities for judging this experience, which they must find the reverse of pleasant. On its eastern side and between it and the ocean is Assateague island, which is also a mile and a half wide, but the power with which the waves come is so great thas at some places the surf sweeps entirely over both islands.— London Standard.

Man's Ruling Wish.

There is one wish ruling over man-kind, and it is a wish which is never in a single instance granted—each man wishes to be his own master. It is a boy's beatific vision, and it remains the grown up man's ruling passion to the last. But the fact is life is a service. The only question is, Whom shalk we serve?--W. F. Faber.

A Boston man is still taking dagner-reotypes and has been doing so over half a century. He insists that in spite of all modern processes in photogra, by they remain the most correct likecoses over produced. --Philadelphia Press.
