With no hatred for the poor, but only for the rich, is the reason given by an anarchist for murdering the Empress of Austria last week.

The last of a long series of family misfortunes has just befallen the house of Austria. An anarchist named Lao breast Saturday afternoon at Geneva, Switherland, while she was walking from the Hotel Beaurivage to the steamer landing on the lake.

The Empress fell, arose again and was carried to the hotel unconscious.
The stretcher upon which the Empress was carried to the hotel was hastily improvised from ears and sailcloth. Doctors and priests were immediately summoned and a telegram was sent to Emperor Francis Joseph.
All efforts to revive the Empress were unavailing, and she expired at three o'clock.

The last words of the empress were addressed to the attendants. Recovering consciousness for the moment, she feebly asked what had happened. The medical examination showed that the assassin must have used a small triangular file. After striking the blow he ran along the Rue des Alpes, but was seized by two cahmen who had witnessed the crime. They handed him over to a boatman and a gendarme, who conveyed him to the police station.

gendarme, who conveyed him to the police station.

The prisoner made no resistance. He even sang as he walked along, saying:

"I did it," and "She must be dead."

Later, when taken to the court house and interrogated by a magistrate he pretended not to know French and refused to answer questions. The police, on searching him, found a document showing his name to be Luigi Loachini horn in Paris in 1873, and an Italian solder. He lived at Parma, Italy.

The assassin told the magistrate that he came to Geneva to assassinate "anhe came to Geneva to assassinate "another important person," but had been unable to execute the project. The reason of his failure he did not give, but he declared that it was only by accident he had learned of the presence of the Austrian Empress at Geneva. The assassin hoped that all anarchists would follow his example which would soon result in the annihilation of the upper classes. Later he admitted that he had come to Switzerland to assassinate the Duke of Orleans.

Should th investigation be ordered, it will include, probably, all matters relating to the conduct of the war, so far as they concern the war department. Secretary Alger expresses himself as confident that such an investigation, if conducted promptly and thoroughly, will result in much good.

Such an investigation as has been requested is, it is pointed out, beset with some difficulties. No charges of a definite character have been filed by any responsible person or official. These were the circumstances under which Gen. Miles left Washington, arriving at Santiago July 11, not as a private individual nor as a visitor. Any pretense that he went there disrobed of his authority or official capacity is too childish to be considered by sensible men. From the moment he arrived at Santiago he was responsible for what might occur.

He then proceeded to the front and after consulting with Gen. Shafter, a note was sent to the Spanish commander by Gen. Shafter, saying that the commanding general of the United States army had arrived in his camp with strong reinforcements, and would meet him between the lines.

"It is admitted," he says, "that there is much suffering in the army, but why lay all the blame on the war department? If this tirade of abuse and defamation of reputation continues, it is a question in my mind whether it will not end in disorganizing the military forces of the country and perhaps prove an obstacle in raising another volunteer army if one should be needed. We are already placed in unenviable light before other nations by what has been said and written of the army and its management. Our soldiers are liable to be rated as bables and our executive officers as imbeciles or corrupt."

Murder at a Political Meeting

The political war between the two factions of the Silver Republican party at Colorado Springs resulted Wednesday morning in the death of Charles Harris of Denver. It was the result of an attempt by the Broad faction to capture the opera house, which was guarded by the Sprague faction. A rush was made by 75 or 100 of the Broad men from both front and rear of the building, and the Sprague men, who held possession, in repelling the attack fired a volley into their assailants. Harris fell with a bullet through the abdomen. The shooting occurred just outside the opera h. we door.

One result of the war will be the establishment of a permanent fleet of army transport vessels on the Atlantic and on the Pacific.
