A Klondike Newspaper.

The Klondike Nugget, one of the two papers published at Dawson, is having a great deal of trouble finding its town subscribers, who pay $24 a year for the privilege of getting a semi-weekly edition. A paragraph in a recent issue explains the difficulty by saying that it is very hard to find some of the houses according to the addresses left at the office. Among those mentioned were "the cabin with the screen door," "the slab house facing the river," "the big tent with two stove pipes" and "the cabin three doors south of where all the dogs are."—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Primitive Ice-Making.

The most ancient method of making ice appears to be that practiced in India. Holes are made in the ground, dry straw is put at the bottom of these, and on it, at the close of the day, are placed pans of water, which are left until the next morning, when the ice that is found within the pans is collected. The industry is carried on only in districts where the ground is dry, and will readily absorb the vapor given off from the water in the pans. The freezing, of course, is due to the great amount of heat absorbed by the vapor in passing from its liquid to its gaseous form.

TO MRS. PINKHAM

From Mrs. Walter E. Budd, of Patchoquo, New York.

Mrs. Budd, in the following letter, tells a familiar story of weakness and suffering, and thanks Mrs. Pinkham for complete relief:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I think it is my duty to write to you and tell you what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I feel like another woman. I had such dreadful headaches through my temples and on top of my head, that I nearly went crazy; was also troubled with chills, was very weak; my left side from my shoulders to my waist pained me terribly. I could not sleep for the pain. Plasters would help for a while, but soon as taken off, the pain would come as bad as ever. Doctors prescribed medicine, but it gave me no relief. I was so weak and strong, headaches, and no rest. I am all owing to you. I cannot praise it enough. It is a wonderful medicine. Give it to every woman I know."

FOR WOMAN'S BENEFIT.

As Afternoon Gown.

For an afternoon gown, silk mousseline is not thought too perishable for glove sleeves, and a shaped flounce skirt with lace guipure insertion at both edges of the knee flounce; waist of guipure of a creamy shade over white or colored silk, and a high stock collar of the same, with a quaint silver and enameled buckle at the back. Sash of white ribbon with the accented buckle at the back, which now accompanies every well tied sash.

Queen Victoria's Maids.

The eight unmarried ladies who hold office as Victoria's maids of honor have some privileges. They are given the prefix of "Honorable" and on marrying receive from the Queen the gift of $5000. One or two maids of honor reside for a fortnight at a time at Windsor or Osborne. The distinctive badge worn by maids of honor is a bow of scarlet ribbon on the shoulder, while the ladies in waiting wear a white bow with the Queen's cameo portrait. The dowry of a maid of honor has been given for at least 150 years, but is according to her majesty's pleasure, and in 1868 it was refused to one lady who engaged herself in marriage without the consent of her royal mistress.

One Woman's Funeral.

Mrs. Nancy L. Barber, a rich woman of St. Louis, Mo., who died recently, was a woman of very strong opinions. Although her death was sudden, her funeral was as she desired it should be, having long since given instructions to her friends how she wished it conducted. After cremation the ashes were carried to the undertaker's in a small copper box. There the ashes were poured into a handsome Edgeworth urn, which was hermetically sealed. The urn was then fastened to a foundation of wood covered with heavy black velvet. Two silver handles were on each side for the pallbearers, and on one side a silver plate, with name and date of death. The urn and foundation were then put in a heavy oak box and carried to her home in Indiana, the vase being finally placed in the family vault.

Pelerine in Style.

An article of particular interest and prominence in the world of fashion, and one which, like the phoenix, has risen from the ashes of his former self with new glories and new endowments, is the cape. With its form this useful garment has changed its name—"pelerine" it is now called, and it is generally made of cloth. Its shape is long behind, reaching to about 20 inches from the ground, and sloping in soft curves toward the front, where it fastens with but one or two hooks or frogs under the chin and over the chest. The graceful curves are invariably edged by the omnipresent serpentine flounce, and the large flaring Stuart collar encircles the neck. The modern pelerine is a garment which appeals at once to practical as well as to artistic tastes, as it combines with elegance of form all those qualities which so long endeared the cape to its wearers, besides offering greater protection from inclemencies of the weather.—Brussels letter in the St. Louis Star.

A Girl's Voice.

A distinguishing difference between the English and the American girl is in the voice, and comparison does not result favorably for the latter. The low tones which Shakespeare recommended and which are among the most attractive charms of the 19th century English women are the exception, not the rule, with the American. The girl whose father's bank account is sufficiently large to send her to a school of the "finished" type is expected to return with a certain amount of knowledge and mental discipline, to be sure, but to her social abilities and charms much more thought is given. Least of her accomplishments, she must dance, have some music, perhaps sing; she must be perfect mistress of herself at teas, dinners and receptions, with small talk ever ready. But to the accomplishment of all she does, her speaking voice, how much, rather how little, real attention is directed.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Romance of Cameos.

It was Mrs. Freddy Gebhard who discovered a little old genius, hidden away in a back street in Richmond, Va., chipping lovely profiles out of agate stones.

A price was offered on the spot, and the old fellow put to work on a big and beautiful cameo of Mrs. Gebhard herself.

It proved a striking one, the lovely head being cut in white against a background of sapphire blue stone.

This Mrs. Gebhard had framed in diamonds. She wore it like a miniature brooch.

The cameo cutter's lucky stars were out just then. Every woman who saw Mrs. Gebhard's brooch and could afford one, went to do likewise. Orders tumbled in and they are coming still.

The heirlooms of future generations will be treasures of art.

From the cameo comes the "cameo photograph," and women who can't afford the little stone cutter are going to the photographer to get those pure cold profile effects in different likenesses.

One woman in a thousand can pay for a cut cameo, but any woman can test her profile in a dainty French vignette.

The process for these photographs is brought over from Paris, and several American studios are turning out exquisite results.

The "process" is really nothing more than a face in clear profile photographed in strong white lights against a block of prepared and polished black wood.

The block of wood is usually about six or eight inches square, with a circular depression in the centre.

Into this the picture is thrown, and shows like a carving of pearl against ebony.

Every curl, every rebellious frond of hair, every cloudy bit of lace, every flower worn is outlined by the camera in marble stateliness.—Chicago Times-Herald.

The Young Girl's Health.

"A young girl should be taught to carry her body erect, holding her abdomen in and putting the ball of her foot first on the ground," writes Mrs. S. T. Rorer in the Ladies' Home Journal. "This is of the utmost importance to keep the organs in good condition. The clothing should be loose, light, warm and suspended from the shoulders. Skirts should be made of light material—either wool or silk. The stockings fastened to the waist by means of supporters; the one skirt worn buttoned to the bottom of the waist, with an outside dress supported from the shoulders, should form the necessary clothing. The shoes should be made to fit the feet, with broad soles and low, broad heels. Gloves should be sufficiently loose not to stop the circulation at the wrists. A short walk each day may be taken, but fatigue should never be produced; far better to spend most of the day out-of-doors in the hammock or a steamer chair.

Early to bed should be the first motto. In the morning, after a sponge bath with a thorough rub, she should drink half a glass of comfortably hot water. When appetite is felt, a soft boiled egg, a piece of whole wheat bread thoroughly baked and well buttered, and a little while after a glass of cool water, noticed, may be taken. The noonday meal should consist of a good, clear beef soup, a broiled steak or roasted beef, a little boiled rice, a lettuce salad with olive oil dressing, and some simple dessert, such as whipped or Bavarian cream. After dinner rest should be taken in the open air, either in the hammock or steamer chair, and without reading or heavy mental occupation. For supper, beef or mutton broiled, and good whole wheat bread well buttered. At the close of this meal she should take slowly about two teaspoonfuls of olive oil and masticate it before swallowing.

English Lace for Dresses.

In view of the extensive use of lace for the dresses by Paris dressmakers, a correspondent of the Ladies' Pictorial has been investigating the subject. She says: I found the lace dress delightfully in evidence in the practical form of beautifully shaped overskirts of lace, all ready just to be sewn into the waistband of the silken underskirt, while material for the bodice is also provided. One lovely lace skirt in black marquis lace, and another in ivory tamarou lace in the loveliest of designs—a close floral border, headed by festoons of flowers, which give the fashionable flounce effect—lace for the bodice being in each case provided.

In view, too, of the Parisian popularity of black Chantilly lace, above all others, let me tell you that there are some skirts in this lovely lace where the design takes the form of stripes, radiating outward from the waist and then curving round above the deep flounce effect.

Lace apart, there are, too, some daintily lovely white muslin robes, the skirt shaped and the bodice provided with insertions of lace alternating with stripes of embroidery for trimming, while others are in fine muslin, bordered with wee tuicks headed by the effective openwork ladderstick, and further decorated at intervals with insertions of lace and a fine tracery of embroidery.

White chiffon flouncing, too, bordered with an applique of fine black lace, headed by true lovers' knots, is a very desirable acquisition of the moment. And then there is a delightful little novelty—a box of ruffled point d'esprit, all edged with white satin baby ribbon, or again in white, edged with black or colored ribbon. You can also have it in white chiffon, with a narrow bordering of black lace. It is the most delightful flounce to a summer costume, and it hangs with a particular grace over the bodice.

Fashion Notes.

Black and white laces are finished with the narrowst satin ribbon over part of the pattern as though it was an embroidery.

China crepe and mousseline dresses are worn over taffeta, with an interlining of mousseline to give them the desired fluffy look.

A brooch that represents a standard, useful and safe style for those who buy only at rather long intervals takes the round form, having one large centre stone with others radiating from it.

The novelty in umbrella heads has taken a step toward reviving the old style of hammered silver in pond-pour designs of various round shaped heads. These are mounted on hard wood and are both artistic and attractive.

Bangles are being shown at the silversmith's. They are made of heavy plain or chased silver, to slide over the hand in the manner of Japanese bracelets. When the bangle is large only one is worn, but little silver wire bracelets are worn in great numbers. A newly engaged girl wears a plain gold bangle of this sort, which is soldered on her arm.

QUEER WORK FOR AN ARMY.

Experiment in Prussia to Estimate the Skill and Speed of Soldiers.

An interesting experiment has just been made by the Prussian war department, with a view to discover the speed with which artisans can work in a given time in the ranks of the German army, says the London Telegraph. Twelve hundred bootmakers, selected from the eighteen army corps scattered about the empire, were summoned just over a month ago to Berlin, to go through a course of four weeks' work. Eighteen colonels, lieutenant-colonels and captains, with a corresponding number of noncommissioned officers, were ordered to come to the capital to superintend the men. The men were quartered in the barracks of the 1st field artillery regiment of the Prussian guards and performed their daily work there. About forty locksmiths were told off to repair their machines when necessary. The men worked in two divisions continuously day and night, one division relieving the other. One division worked from 2 p. m. till 2 a. m., whereupon they were relieved by the other party, which in its turn worked from 2 a. m. till 2 p. m. Two pauses of half an hour each were made in each twelve hours' work. The men got their dinner in the barracks—the one section immediately before settling down to work, the other section immediately after their work. The wages given coincided with the wages given in time of war—for ten days, including bread money. The 1,200 men made 2,500 pairs of boots per day—that is to say, infantry and cavalry boots and lace shoes.

His End Hastened.

A colleague of mine tells me a story of a Scotch newspaper with which he was connected. A local celebrity was dying by inches. His biography was written, and in the early hours of the morning a printer's devil used to be sent across to ask for the dying man, so that the obituary might be thoroughly up to date. Morning after morning the boy asked the landlady the same question, till he got angry at having to make the fruitless journey. At last one morning he got desperate. "Is that man nearly dead?" he asked. "The paper's gain to press and we canna' wait any longer."—London Sketch.

A Soldier's Keeneye.

From the Democrat-Messenger, Mt. Sterling, Ill.

When Richmond had fallen and the great commanders had met beneath the historic apple tree at Appomattox, the 83d Pennsylvania Volunteers, prematurely aged, clad in tatters and ragged, broken in body but of dauntless spirit, swung into line for the last "grand review," and then quietly marched away to begin life's fray anew amid the hills and valleys of the Keystone State. Among the number Asa Robinson came back to the old home in Mt. Sterling, Ill., back to the bedside that he had left at the call to arms four years previous. He went away a happy, healthy farmer boy in the first flush of vigorous manhood; he came back a ghost of the self that answered to President Lincoln's call for "300,000 more."

The Soldier's Return.

To-day he is an alert, active man and tells the story of his recovery as follows: "I was a great sufferer from sciatic rheumatism almost from the time of my discharge from the army. Most of the time I was unfitted for manual labor of any kind, and my sufferings were at all times intense. At times I was almost double, and got around only with the greatest difficulty. Nothing seemed to give me permanent relief until three years ago, when my attention was called to some of the wonderful cures effected by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I had not taken more than half a box when I noticed an improvement in my condition, and I kept on improving steadily. I took three boxes of the pills, and at the end of that time was in better condition than at any time since the close of my army service. Since then I have never been bothered with rheumatism. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People is the only remedy that ever did me any good, and to them I owe my restoration to comparative health. They are a grand remedy."

MRS. PINKHAM TALKS TO THE FUTURE WOMAN.

Will the New Generation of Women be More Beautiful or Less So? Miss Jessie Ebnor's Experience.

A pleasing face and graceful figure! These are equipments that widen the sphere of woman's usefulness. How can a woman have grace of movement when she is suffering from some disorder that gives her those awful bearing-down sensations? How can she retain her beautiful face when she is nervous and racked with pain?

Young women, think of your future and provide against ill health. Mothers, think of your growing daughter, and prevent in her as well as in yourself irregularity or suspension of nature's duties.

If puzzled, don't trust your own judgment. Mrs. Pinkham will charge you nothing for her advice; write to her at Lynn, Mass., and she will tell you how to make yourself healthy and strong.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound strengthens the female organs and regulates the menses as nothing else will. Following is a letter from Miss JESSIE EBNOR, 1712 West Jefferson St., Sandusky, Ohio.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I feel it my duty to let you know of the great benefit your remedies have been to me. I suffered for over a year with inflammation of the ovaries. I had doctored, but no medicine did me any good. Was at a sanatorium for two weeks. The doctor thought an operation necessary, but I made up my mind to give your medicine a trial before submitting to that. I was also troubled with leucorrhoea, painful menstruation, dizziness, nervousness, and was so weak that I was unable to stand or walk. I have taken in all several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier, and am now in good health. I will always give your medicine the highest praise."
