One of the young men of the High school went on a fishing expedition for crabs last week, his efforts proving very successful. The expedition was in the interest of the zoology class.

Give Them the Home Paper.

A home paper should be found in every family. It should be the first paper read by every child. It will be of interest to the child, because of the child's acquaintance with the persons and things it mentions. A foreign paper cannot be expected to interest a little boy or girl when there is not a thing or person or place mentioned in it that the child ever heard of before. But the home paper speaks of people and things that the child knows something about, has talked to, or seen, and any mention of or reference to them excites his interest, or curiosity, and causes it to read about them. Thus a reading habit is formed, and as the child's knowledge and acquaintance widens it will be prepared to take up and read other publications of a wider range and more general character. But the home paper should be the first to be placed in every child's hands.—Brookville Democrat.
