NUMBER 37.

Death of David Fickling.

Many times during the past few months has death appeared in Hutchinson in unexpected places.

Few there were coming and going about Hutchinson who could claim a more cordial welcome from a larger number of friends than David Fickling. Kind, generous to a fault, cheery in sunshine and storm, a friend to the unfortunate, a man among men, the world was surely better for his living.

On one of his almost daily trips to town about two weeks ago, as he was feeling poorly from the effects of influenza, he remained over night at the home of his mother. He was worse the next morning and unable to return to the farm. Pneumonia soon developed and he became the subject of the anxious solicitude of his relatives and friends. The disease made rapid progress and last Friday night he breathed his last.

He was born in Norfolkshire, England, in 1859 and came with his mother and brothers to America in 1872, settling in McLeod county. He was married in 1886 to Miss Jennie Rice, and the union was a most happy one. Her death, April 21, 1900, cast a cloud over his life and he mourned in silence, but none the less deeply.

His near relatives in this country are Samuel Fickling, the well known merchant, Mrs. G. W. Sykes, of Reynoldsville, Pa., and his aged mother, residing in Hutchinson. A brother, John R. Fickling, has for several years been a resident of Japan.

Mr. Fickling was a member of the Masonic, Workmen and Eastern Star orders and members of these societies and scores of old friends and neighbors attested by their presence their sorrow at the departure from earthly scenes of their friend and brother, David Fickling.—Hutchinson (Minn.) Independent.

George W. Sykes, of this place, attended the funeral.

L. J. McENTIRE, Secretary.

Mary Hayes, an employe at the Brookville Woolen Mills, met with a frightful accident Thursday evening. Work at the mill was about to be closed down for the evening, and as Miss Hayes stooped to pick some article from the floor her hair caught in the machinery, and had the mill been running at full force there is scarcely a doubt but that she would have met with an instant and horrible death. As it was a portion of the skin and hair was torn from her head, and she is in a very nervous condition as a result of the shock.—Brookville B.

Soft Coal Market.

Bituminous branch of coal trade is inclined to dullness, for there is a full supply being mined at all points, now mines being opened and the older ones developed to a degree which promises for the future an ample quantity, no matter how rapidly the industrials may improve and take on tonnage; in the west the quietness is particularly noticeable and it is said that a large consumer can now buy coal cheaper than the price he pays on the contracts entered into last summer, a quite different state of affairs from that existing a year ago, when contracts were a nightmare to the operators.

At the tidewater ports there is now no delay in loading, and the consumer finds no difficulty in getting forward all that he may require; stocking for the future is going on at many places. Even the Pittsburgh report shows that things are not quite on the boom as they were this time a year ago; the demand for coal is only fair. The tonnage output is considerably below what it was during September and October, when the lake shipments were at the maximum, and the output during these months is usually the measuring stick of producers. The fact that output for ready consumption is ahead of the normal of any previous year, but unless the maximum tonnage is coming out a wave of pessimism sweeps around among operators. There is every reason to believe that soft coal people will do well to hold prices as they are at the present time; we doubt very much if the average for this year will equal that of last year unless something comes to help to further demand—say from abroad.

At Buffalo, in bituminous, the supply is fully equal to demand, orders having fallen off somewhat during the past week. Still there is no dearth of business and no cause for uneasiness. The demand is good, more available cars have strengthened the mine shipments and the soft coal men are in a measure relieved of an anxiety resulting from a too eager market, which with all their available resources could not be satisfied. There have been no changes in price.
