A FRIEND IN NEED.

By Victoria F. Benton.

OW long before the next train leaves for Boston?" The burly porter, who quite genial in manner when he saw the pretty face of the young lady be-

"Just one hour, miss," he replied. "Then I can take a look at the city," said Marian East to herself. The porter heard, and was at once ready with his advice:

Best jump into that street car. miss. The blue one over yonder. It will take you up on Main street in ten minutes, and Main street holds all the principal stores."

Marian East thanked him with a charming smile, and made her way to

The city was not a very large one. but the shops were sufficiently tempting to hold her a prisoner before them for some moments before she remembered to glance at a clock.

Twenty minutes of her hour had already slipped by. She gave up a secret little plan that she had formed on her way that evening in the train. She knew only one person in that city, and he was quite ignorant of her pres ence on this day.

During the previous summer she had met George Elphinstone in the country at the house of a mutual friend who was his business partner. They had ridden, drove, walked and talked together for three long, happy months. 'And when they parted George Elphinstone had asked for and obtained her picture, which he had vowed to keep forever, as the most sacred treasure of his life. Then he went away and silence fell between them. No letter came to remind Marian of the friend whom she had allowed to grow too dear. To all appearance she had been only a summer friend to him, while he-oh, how her heart ached as she tried to unlearn the lesson which he had been at such pains to teach her in those happy days among the mountain scenes! It was all over now! She had learned to forget George Elphinstone, she said to herself. And she would not own that her "stop over" in this city-his me-had been made only that she might have the sad pleasure of looking upon the walls that sheltered him, and of seeing his name on the office sign which he had so often described to her. Himself she did not wish to see, unless she might catch one glimpse of bim from a distance, herself unseen, in some crowded street. To be obliged to speak to him now-to hold his hand ment, and to look into his eyes, as a stranger-oh, that would be dreadful! Not for worlds would she have and it happen so!

As these thoughts passed through Marian's mind she had left the shop indows and had been borne onward by the ever-burrying crowd until the name of a street, painted on a lamp post opposite caught her eye end her to a pause-"Spring

It was there that George Elphiustone had his office.

There was but the breadth of one street between them. Should she cross it?

Further up Spring street she could see the iron posts and railings of a rk or public garden. Well dressed ladies and children were constantly passing up that way.

Most of them passed by Marian, not without a swift glance of inquiry at her fixed attitude and thoughtful, ab-

Marian turned pale.

"You are wronging me terribly," she said to the indy, who only tossed her head scornfully.

"Come!" said the policeman.
"I am innocent: I have never been the purse! I am just from the country, and I am going to Boston to take a place in a school," said Marian, trying to keep back her tears. "Indeed, madam, you are terribly mistaken," she added, turning again to the lady, who noded to the policeman and promised to meet him at the police station in ten minutes. "I am a respectable school-teacher. My name is Marian East, and I have—"

"Marian East," repeated a voice in the crowd, which was gradually collecting outside the group of three. *******

The next moment the nervous lady and the policeman were pushed unceremoniously uside, two warm, friendly hands took Marian's, and a handsome, dark-eyed man was smiling * down at her protectingly.

"Miss East! How delighted I am to meet you!" said the gental voice of George Elphinstone-the voice that she had learned to love so well. have been traveling in Europe con stantly for a year past, on business for a client, and have been moving so rapidly that it was quite hopeless for letters to follow me, and returned only yesterday morning, and to-mor row I was going to our friend Gay lord to ask your address. "But the Boston place is a very goo one," said Marian, innocently.

"But you will have so many pupils to look after. In the place I offer. you will have but one, and he will give you as little trouble as possible. What do you say, Marian? Will you teach your husband how to be a good and happy man?"

Tears rose to her pretty eyes as he drew her head down upon his shoul-

"Oh, you will never know how much I have cared for you!" she murmured: and I thought you had forgotten me.

"I was only waiting, love, till I had a fit home to offer you," he said, as he kissed her.

And in her heart Marian secretly blessed the nervous lady, and the policeman, and the missing purse .-Saturday Night.

Next to the Zulus the Basutos are physically and intellectually the finest tribe in Africa; and, Indeed, the "Fingoes," who are met with in large numbers throughout the country, are, I believe, members of dispersed Zulu tribes who have intermarried. The Basutos mostly wear blankets of divers colors-more commonly dark red -which reach to about the knee, though the younger generation even dispense with this loose garb, and run about in their bronze, chocolate-colored skins. Many of the women have their faces tattooed in lines from the forehead to the chin and across the face. The Basutos know a stranger at once, and if one remains long in the country he is frequently addressed by a nickname, such as "Father of tall men," "Father of long beards," etc., the more common and complimentary title being "Morena" or chief. When one meets a Basuto the general salute is "Lumela" (pronounced dumelah, and meaning "Good-day to you"), the reply being simply "E," (pronounced like a in day, and meaning "Good-day to you also"); or, supposing one wished to say, "I like to travel in company," it would be "Ke rata ho eta ke na lo babang."-Good Words.

Just Be Natural, You Say. The thing most essential of all in life photography is that the persons photographed shall seem unconscious of the presence of the camera. That they should really be so is seldom possible. except in a crowd. The hurly-burly of a city street offers a fair chance for concealment to the man with a hand camera, though no matter how cautious he is the prints all to often show some pair of eyes turned suspiciously on the instrument. But in the country he cannot help being conspicuous. and he has to confess his purpose and ask his subjects to pose. This is per-haps just as well, for it is next to impossible, with a basty snap-shot, to make the surrounding count for all they might in relation to the figures. One does best when he has chosen with some deliberation the position for both his camers and those who are posing.—Saturday Evening Post.

The Wock in General Business Without Str.king Features, but Remains Strong and Stoady-Favorable Showing.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s "Weekly Review of Trade" says: The week in general business has been without striking new feature, but in this respect the outcome has been favorable. Not one of the great industries finds any scarcity of orders for goods, and business is done at prices which show a slight tendency to rise, except in textiles, which have been specified by the selection of the second of rise, except in textiles, which have been affected by the reduction of 10 to 20 per cent. in the season's opening prices by the American Woolen Company. There is nothing discouraging in the slight decline in commodity prices from January 1 to February 1, and railroad carnings continue large, increasing 11.1 per cent. for three weeks of January over last year and 26.2 per cent. over 1899. While steel mills have contracts on hand for their output from three to 1899. While steel mills have contracts on hand for their output from three to six months ahead, prices naturally rule firm. Few actual advances are recorded, but there is expectation of a higher figure soon for Bessemer pig iron, while rumors are numerous as to a rise in billets, plates and structural materials. All these lines show a brisk demand. Nails and barbed wire advanced $2 per ton, owing to heavy orders from the West, and it is expected the few mills still idle will shortly resume. Activity in Texas oil fields has an influence on the sales of pipes and tanks. Wages are in a fair way to be satisfactorily adjusted at valley furnaces and the reduction agreed upon is less than originally an-nounced. Export orders decrease, and the Russian armor plate contract may not go to an American, although his
