

SWEET REVENGE

"Captain Stanforth, I have been hunting for you for months."

"Me?"

"You?"

"What for?"

A hush came over all, as if about to listen to a sentence of death.

"To kill you."

There was a brief murmur among those looking on, then they stood breathless, waiting for the next scene in what promised to be a tragedy.

Only Helen knew what my words meant. I saw a spasmodic quiver pass over her as I had seen death touch a comrade who had been shot in battle.

Then, gathering her forces, she stood still, her face denoting the smothered fire of a volcano.

"May I ask, sir," said the officer, pale but calm, "why you desire my death?"

"The wrong, the brutal wrong you did."

I know not why some demon of barbarism should have come to me at this critical moment when of all others I should have shown gentleness and magnanimity. Here was an opportunity to make a graceful acknowledgment of Helen Stanforth's service and sacrifice, perhaps to heal the breach between us. I threw it away. My abandoned purpose was rekindled—I was crazed by Helen's treatment. I drew my revolver and brought it to bear on my unarmed enemy.

"Coward!" cried Helen.

I turned to her scornfully. "Who had me pursue this man to the bitter end?"

"I."

"Who promised to aid me?"

"I."

"Who now begs for her brother's life at the hands of a southern renegade?"

"I? Never!" She sprang between me and her brother, "Fire!"

She stood glaring at me, beautiful in her uncompromising fury. I was bewildered, entangled in the meshes of her beauty, her relentless will power.

Then suddenly a cold chill swept over me, as a blighted frost across a land hot with the rays of a tropical sun. I stood aguish at what I had done. I had returned her inestimable service by a miserable attempt to force her to beg for her brother's life. I had lost what hope I had cherished of a reconciliation—of winning her. I threw my weapon into a corner and was striding from the room, when Captain Stanforth, freeing himself from Jack, cried:

"In the name of God, what does all this mean?"

"It means, Captain Stanforth," I said, turning, "that on a certain night in east Tennessee a party of Unionists on their way north were ambushed by citizens with shotguns. A body of Confederate cavalry came down to their assistance. You, captain—"

"It is false. I led my company to the scene you mention not to attack, but to protect."

It was now my turn to stand stupefied. Had I been all these months following an error?

"I came on the ground," Captain Stanforth continued, "just in time to witness the most diabolical sight I ever saw in the south. One incident of that terrible night I shall always remember—a murder that I punished with my own hand. I saw a woman flying for protection to a man who stood near her. A cowardly cur beside me fired, and she fell through her protector's arms. I drew my revolver and shot the murderer dead."

"You shot the murderer?"

I had no tongue for other words. This man, dear to Helen, dear to Jack, dear to all this household, was not only innocent of the crime I had imputed to him, but was my avenger. I took one step forward and seized his hand.

"Thank God!"

"You have been mistaken?"

"So far mistaken that had it not been for these two women I would have shot you down where you stand."

I strode to the door, rushed down the path to the gate, mounted my horse and without once looking back at the gaping crowd behind me galloped down the road after the advancing army.

CHAPTER XXIII. THE UNION SAVED.

I CAUGHT the troops just as they were entering the city. All that we could have wished for was accomplished. The whole territory was surprised and defenseless, and a hundred miles of railroad fell into our hands. Machine shops, rolling stock in abundance, telegraph and all other paraphernalia for operating the line were among the trophies, and on the morning after the capture the men who had been employed under the direction of the Confederate government went to work for the United States.

And now followed a rest for three months, a longer stay in one place than any I experienced during the war. It would have been the most delightful had it not been for my estrangement from Helen Stanforth. Though I was welcome at her father's house, though the family apparently became attached to me, though Jack and Buck loved me as I loved them, Helen remained obdurate. In vain I sought to soften her by those attentions which men seek to entrap a woman's heart. She would not even treat me with indifference. I was to her a renegade to the south, an unpardonable offender.

I reported the case of Captain Stanforth to the general and secured from him a parole, which enabled him to divide his time between his father's house and the Rutland plantation with his fiancée Jacqueline, who soon nursed him back to health. Captain Beaumont was brought to Huntsville under guard, and I interested myself in securing for him an early exchange, which, after hearing of Jack's engagement, he was extremely anxious to obtain. He was passed through the lines to Chattanooga, vowing that he would give his life to the Confederacy if he could find a Yankee bullet to assist him. He was too manly and chivalrous to cast the slightest blame on Jack for his disappointment.

One morning I took my friends from Mr. Stanforth—excepting Helen—into headquarters and introduced them to the general. He was aware of our coming and had directed that the outlaws should be brought before him at the same time.

"Are these the men?" he asked.

"Yes, general," I replied.

To an officer of the guard he said: "Take them away. I don't wish to see any more of them."

Jackie, who had heard these words once before, when they were applied to me, and consequently knew what they meant, turned pale. She begged the general to spare them. He shook his head.

"Impossible. They are the crowning barbarity of war."

"But, general, that one," pointing to Captain Ringold, "he helped us."

"Ah! I had forgotten that." Then, turning to Ringold:

"If set at liberty, how long will you require to get out of my lines?"

"I will go at once."

"Go, and if you are seen about here after 'tattoo' this evening you will follow your men."

The relieved man sprang toward Jacqueline, seized her hand and kissed her.

"I am a changed man," he said as he kissed her hand.

"From this moment I am a changed man," he said to her, "and your bright eyes and kind heart have done it." In another moment he was gone.

Eighteenth. All those certain two town lots situated in the Gordon addition to the borough of Brookville, county and state aforesaid, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a post on Hastings street; thence north 88 1/2 degrees east by "B" street about one hundred and twenty-five feet; thence south 14 degrees east about one hundred and thirty-four feet to an alley; thence south 88 degrees east about 120 feet to a post on Hastings street; thence north 5 degrees west by said street about 132 feet to the place of beginning, containing about 16,000 square feet, more or less.

Upon said several lots and tracts of land there are certain improvements to wit:

Tract No. 1, is known as Avalon Terrace and consists of 103 town lots which will be sold separately on said day of sale. These lots are located near the center of the borough of Reynoldsville and on Main and Grant streets. This plot of lots has no equal in the vicinity of said borough, and no purchaser can find a better or surer investment for his money.

Tract No. 4, consists of certain town lots that in a short time will be of great find a better or surer investment for his money.

Tract No. 6, consists of about 11 acres and can be plotted in town lots or can be used for good truck farm.

Tract No. 7, consists of two town lots and will be offered separately. Lot No. 87 has thereon erected one frame dwelling house, two stories high, and is 16 by 20 feet with kitchen attached.

Tract No. 12, consists of lot No. 4, on Mill street, having thereon erected one two-story frame dwelling house, 16 by 24 feet, with summer kitchen attached.

Tract No. 13, is situated on Jackson street, having thereon erected one dwelling, 16 by 28 feet, two stories high, with kitchen attached 16 by 16 feet; one store room 16 by 28 feet, with room attached 12 by 16 feet.

Tract No. 14, consists of about 102 acres and is nearly all cleared and under a good state of cultivation, and is in every way a very valuable tract of land, being situated in the Borough of Reynoldsville and close to one of the best markets in Jefferson County. This tract of land could be divided into small tracts and re-sold at a large profit.

Tract No. 15, consists of what is known as Beulah Cemetery, and there still remains a large portion of said tract to be laid out in lots and each lot will be needed and can be well sold.

Tract No. 16, is the Saxton farm and is nearly all cleared and under a good state of cultivation, having thereon erected, one frame two story dwelling house 16 by 24 feet, one barn 30 by 40 feet and necessary out buildings, good water, 100 bearing fruit trees. This farm is well situated and at a good market.

Tract No. 17, is underlaid with coal 5 feet thick, a vein of lime 7 feet thick, good vein of fire clay. This tract is near the Falls Creek market.

Tract No. 18, consists of lots Nos. 12 and 14, in the Gordon addition to the borough of Brookville, Pa., and is in the industrial center of Brookville.

All persons should bear in mind that real estate is the safest of all investments, that all real estate in and about Reynoldsville, within the last five years has increased in value 50 per cent, that said town now has more and better manufacturing industries than any other place in Jefferson County, and that by reason thereof real estate is sure to rapidly increase in value.

Terms of sale: one half of the purchase money in cash on day of sale, as soon as property is sold and the balance in one year, with interest, secured by bond and mortgage or judgment bond to be entered as lien on the premises.
