NUMBER 45.

Spring is Just Around

As is shown by the early songster coming up from the Southland and when you want your Spring goods you naturally keep this fact in mind. Coming here means a selection of the new and modern, the correct and fashionable ideas; it means little prices for you, too—a plump saving, and the persons who are saving of their money should make a note of this.

Boys' Newest Clothes

This is always a satisfactory store for the Boys' goods for the reason that you secure service giving materials at no higher prices than for common kinds. We've an unusually handsome showing of the new Spring Ideas, but we mark these goods at slightest margins and that makes low prices for you.

Mike McCullough, who had his leg broken in the Sprague mine about a year ago, and has just been able to work a few weeks, was unfortunate enough to strike his foot on some obstacle while walking home last week, breaking a small bone in his right foot.

There is some talk among our well-to-do citizens to form a committee and try to have the DuBois street car line extended to our town, seeing the Reynoldsville people are slow to make a move this way.

THE CHASE EXECUTION.

W. T. Cox, Who Saw Him Hanged, Recalls Some of the Facts.

Two weeks ago an article appeared in the Punsutawney Spirit concerning the Chase execution, and Mr. Ninian Cooper, of this place, called our attention to the fact that there were some errors in the Spirit's article, and he was to have given us the corrections, but amidst the multitudinous duties that confront a country editor the matter was overlooked last week. W. T. Cox, of Sandy Valley, however, took the matter up and wrote a letter to the Spirit, which was published in that paper last week and which we clip and publish, as follows:

"I noticed in a recent issue of your paper an item in regard to the hanging of Charles Chase. Your informant was just ten years too late in his date, and was also mistaken about the implement used to commit the murder. It was not a hatchet, but a maul used to drive the frow used in splitting shingle bolts. The murder was committed February 19, 1867, and the execution took place August 28 of the same year. Chase's full name was Charles Winton, and his accomplice was William Dean Graves. They were employed by Roderick McDonald at making split shingles when they conceived the idea of killing their employer's aunt, who lived alone in a little farm house. Chase was captured the next day after the murder in a barn on the road between Brookwayville and Ridgway. He was intoxicated. Graves was captured a few months later in Michigan, where he was traced by having used gold to pay his expenses. Gold was at a high premium at that time, being out of general circulation, and naturally excited comment. William Norris, who still lives near Reynoldsville, was one of the jurors who convicted Chase. Thomas North and John Frampton, of Punsutawney, are two others of the surviving jurors.

On the day before Chase was hanged his father, mother and two brothers, who lived near Karthaus, Clearfield county, started to drive to Brookville. When they reached Reynoldsville the mother of the condemned man stopped at the residence of Thomas Reynolds, and remained there until after the execution. The others drove on. I saw them coming out of the jail after they had visited Charles for the last time. It was 11 o'clock a. m. He was hanged at 2 o'clock p. m. There was a large crowd in Brookville and the Sheriff had armed guards placed all around the jail yard. I witnessed the execution from the roof of the American House barn. We could see Charles from that position from his head down to his waist. He was a large man, weighing 200 pounds, and had a very thick neck. When the drop fell the rope slipped over his head and he fell. In about three minutes they had him up again, when he coolly asked for a drink of water, which was given him. The rope was readjusted, the black cap pulled over his eyes, and the drop fell. In two hours the body was turned over to his father and brothers, who took it away in a two-horse hack. Chase was buried near Karthaus. W. T. COX, Sandy Valley, Pa., March 3, 1902.

Over The Phone.

Printed instructions should be issued to telephone patrons containing the following suggestions:

When speaking to a man use your natural voice, full, emphatic and distinct. When speaking to a lady modulate it into a sweet, coaxing tone and say something pleasant on the side.

Don't talk love by wire. Inductions may carry your "soft answers" to other ears than those for which they are intended.

In talking speak into the phone. The listener may not have long distance ears. Omit nasal tones as much as possible.

If your name is John Smith, say so. You need not bother about giving out the information that you are "Mr. Smith."

Do not utter unkind words about the little lady who does the switching at the Central office. If you were in her place you would not do as well as she does.

Do not sponge telephonic favors. If you have use for a phone rent one.

Don't swear over the phone. If you must use profanity postpone it until nobody is around to hear you. Swear words are vulgar and you do not wish to have people consider you of that kind.—Ee.

The management struck a popular chord in the selection of a soprano soloist to vary the program and no better choice could have been made than that of Helen Logsdon Gilmore, who by her well trained voice and wonderfully expressive rendering of the various numbers on the program completely captivated the audience.—Chillicothe, (O.)
