Saving the Children.

One of the most interesting and valuable forms of "child saving" work that done by the Illinois State Fraining School for Girls. It is in Geneva, Ill., one hour's ride from Chicago, and was established to take young girls from vicious lives and reform them.

The school is divided into six "families," each of which has a dormitory, assembly room, kitchen, dining room and laundry. The head of each family is called the mother, and is selected for her tact and kindliness as much as for her ability to train the girls in the duties required. Each girl is drilled in baking, cooking, washing, ironing and sewing. They also milk cows and make their own butter.

It is proposed to establish a dress making and cutung department in the institution, for many of the girls have a liking for sewing, although they did not know how to take a stitch when they came into the home

In addition to this training the girls eceive a common school education in the branches of reading, writing and arithmetic.

It is not all work at the school. however. The grounds are ample and beautiful, and the girls go out every day, while for rainy days they have two large playrooms. Part of their work, even, is regarded as play by them, as they thoroughly enjoy the gardening, sewing and cooking. Un-der the training of a skilled gardener they grow most of the vegotables used in the school, and have the finest back and are carried the full length wer garden in the locality. of the skirt, or sume a set time The

A hat made of strings of pearls interwoven with bands of lace is one

Modish separate skirts are effect tively trimmed with folds of moira extending from the walst line to the head of the flounce. One idea is to set a fold on either side of the seams an laid very flat. Then the flounce is finished with bands of the same material, running horizontally and widen ing toward the back. Lace still continues fashionable, and for street and evening wear is held in highest favor. Tambour lace, relic of several decades ago, occupies an important place on the list, although it is not truly lace-that is, needle made lace-as it is worked with a sort of crochet hook, with the net The patstretched on the frame.
