Not True to Nature. A favorite joke in cheap theatrics is a gay old man who is running around after the young and pretty girls. It's not true to nature. Young and pretty girls soon tire of an old man. They do not pay him any attention and say things that hurt his feelings. Old men are rarely gay, but they are usually bilious.—Athens Globe.

HONEY AS A FOOD.

It is of Great Value as a Medicine and Highly Nutritious. Starch and sugar when eaten undergo a digestive change before they are assimilated. In honey this change has been made to a considerable extent by the bees. It is easy of assimilation and concentrated and furnishes the same element of nutrition as sugar and starch—imparts warmth and energy. As a medicine honey has great value and many uses. It is excellent in most lung and throat affections and is often used with great benefit in place of cod liver oil. Occasionally there is a person with whom it does not agree, but most people can learn to use it with beneficial results. Children, who have more natural appetites, generally prefer it to butter. Honey is laxative and sedative, and in diseases of the bladder and kidneys it is an excellent remedy. It has much the same effect as wine or stimulants, without the injurious effects, and is unequalled in meat and harvest drinks. As an external application it is soothing when clear and soothing when diluted. In many places it is much appreciated as a remedy for croup and colds. In preserving fruit the formic acid it contains makes a better preservative than sugar sirup, and it is also used in cooking and confectionery. In early times, it is said, Palestine flowed with milk and honey, but we have far more of both today than the people of any age ever had. Honey does not injure the teeth as candies do.—Health.

Patti Made His Reputation. Adeline Patti was not always such a "gold mine" to managers as some may suppose, says Leslie's Weekly. When she visited New York in 1880, her manager, Signor Lupo, overreached himself by starting out on a ten dollar admission basis, and the venture was a financial failure, notwithstanding Patti's great artistic success. She sang to a fourteen hundred dollar house on the first night and on the second to $400. She got discouraged, as it was her own venture, and gave it up. The late Henry E. Abbey, who was bold in his speculations, then engaged her and her company at $5,000 per concert. He began at Wallack's old theater at Thirteenth street, giving scenes of opera, and the concerts there averaged over $7,000 a performance, but he lost in the out of town concerts $20,000. A little later, being asked by De Vivo to take Patti to San Francisco, Abbey replied: "My dear De Vivo, I have got enough of Patti. I lost $20,000, but I made a reputation."

Those Who Fought and Ran Away. During the Spanish-American war, at the recruiting station in St. Louis, the following, as related in the Galveston News, took place between a recruiting officer and an applicant who was of Irish nationality: R. O.—How old are you? I. R.—Don't know, but OI must be auld enough. R. O.—Have you ever been in the army? I. R.—Yis, sor. R. O.—Have you ever been in any battles? I. R.—OI have. R. O.—What ones? I. R.—OI've been in all ov them. R. O.—Were you in the battle of Bull Run? I. R.—OI was. R. O.—Did you run? I. R.—Yon bet OI did, and them poor devils that didn't run are there yet.

Venetian Hospitality. Whatever might have been said against the Venetians, they were a hospitable people—this, too, in small as well as in great matters. When, for example, in 1476, an ambassador from the Khan of Tartary visited the city and it was known that the Khan and his suit carried but one shirt apiece in their bags, the senate formally voted 20 ducats that they might be provided with additional shirts, which were accordingly made "alla tartaresca" and presented. We can imagine how the good counselors and citizens would enjoy this little jest.

Pinned Faith to Plymouth Rock. The dominance of New England sentiment in matters of ancestry and early history was illustrated at a certain meeting of women in New York the other day when the first English settlement was spoken of as having been made in Jamestown, Va. "Why, I always thought it was in Plymouth rock!" exclaimed a daughter of New England. "And so did I." "And I," echoed others, at least half of the women present, all of them supposed to be well educated persons, being of that opinion.

Delated. "Is th' thrain gone?" gasped Pat as he rushed into the station. "It is," replied the agent calmly. "They didn't yet tell me that when OI was here yest'day, awn OI wudn't at bruk me neck runnin'."—Ohio State Journal.

BRAINS AND BEVERAGES

Famous Literary Lights Who Revolved in Coffee and Tea. Famous literary men have all had their favorite beverages. Tea and coffee, however, head the list, and these two drinks, which the famous William Cobbett denounced as "slops," have been the means of spurting many a drowsy journalist to renewed energy. Voltaire, the king of wits and litterateur, was a confirmed coffee drinker. In his old age he often took fifty cups a day, which sadly hurt his digestion and hastened his death. Balzac never drank anything else but coffee, and during the early hours of the morning for he began at 12 o'clock midnight, he used to take copious drafts of this stimulating drink. Sir James Macintosh was so fond of coffee that he used to assert that the powers of a man's mind would generally be found to be proportional to the quantity of that stimulant which he drank. Colver pays a tribute to tea in the "Task" when he says "the cup that cheers, but not inebriates." He was very fond of the Chinese beverage. But the king of tea drinkers was Samuel Johnson. On one occasion Sir Joshua Reynolds reminded the great man that he had drunk eleven cups of tea, whereupon Johnson retorted: "Sir, I did not count your glasses of wine. Why then should you number my cups of tea?"

A Protest That Failed. "During my stay in the City of Mexico," says a well known Philadelphian, "I went out one Sunday to see a bull-fight. It's the proper thing to do, you know. All the American tourists go. Seated very near to me in the raised benches of the amphitheater was a German woman whom I know by sight as an enthusiastic member of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. She is one of those who insist upon showing a badge every time a driver uses a whip on a balky horse and demanding an arrest. "Well, she had her little badge on all right, and when the fight between the bull and the picadors became pretty hot she jumped up in her seat and demanded that it be stopped. "Stop this at once," she shouted, waving her arms. "Sit down, Maud, and don't make a fool of yourself!" exclaimed her husband. But she insisted upon having her own way. "I am a member of the Pennsylvania Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals," she declared, waving the lapel of her coat that contained the button. "I demand that this hateful shall cease." Everybody laughed at her, and after awhile she went out, taking her husband with her."—Philadelphia Record.

CLOTHS OR CLOTHES.

One learns many strange uses and misuses of things at country inns, but let us hope that the following experience related by a friend of mine as having happened to himself is a rare one: He had gone to bed in an Irish inn, bidding the landlady to leave him called at 8. At 9, however, next morning, she knocked at his door. "Ye've to get up," she said. "What o'clock is it?" "Six, surr." "Go away. I am not going to get up till 8." At 7 she reappeared. "Indeed, and ye must get up now, it's 7." Finding him unmoved at her next return, she said: "Get up, there's a sweet gentleman. There's two commercial gentlemen waiting for their breakfast, and I can't lay the cloth till I have yer honor's top sheet."—Cornhill Magazine.

The Death Chair. Doubt is often cast upon electrocution as a system by the fact that persons may survive an accidental shock of 2,000 volts. The Electrical World and Engineer points out that the conditions of a chance contact are entirely different from those provided in the chair. It says, "There can be no question that the subject dies by the effects of the electric shock and is dead beyond all hope before the autopsy takes place." Pure Blood. If infectious disease is in the vicinity, it should be remembered that pure blood contains bodies that will combat disease germs. These bodies are the white corpuscles, and they will envelop and actually devour the fatal bacilli of fevers and similar diseases. So it is well to keep the vital fluid in health.
