But in time the printing press came, and with it a new era in the thoughts and actions of men. For in the printed books men found means of perpetuating their thoughts more durable, more convenient, simpler and ensier than orchitecture. Once a thought was put in stone and put in a certain spot and so acquired a degree of santctity which dreven men to to to venerate and worship, Now the Europe that an eye-witness says: "You would have thought that the world had shaken off her old garments to clothe herself in a white arrray of churches." And to these churches men devoted all their lives and interes.

Now churches are still built, but no longer do men lavish that profusion of wealth and thought upon them, nor do they now at profusion of wealth and thought upon them, nor do they now at tend the services of the church as they once did. And from the ministers of the temple goes up the unceasing complnint that men They are not They have simply changed the method of their worship. The building of stone is no longer necessary to stir thedevotion of men. The printing press has made a temple of every man's home. The church is the working union of pricsts and prophets and al who by wise teaching seek to guide the souls of men. While there was no writing, no printing, the preaching of the voice was the sole method of doing this. But the printed page speaks to the ouls of men no matter where they are. The writers of newspaper pamphlets, books, poems are the working, enfective church of words, which brings gladness and peace to the heartsor his reacers it. And he who in newspaper, poem or book brings home to our hearts the nobility, endurance and sell-sacrifice of

MAN'S A MAN FOR A' THAT.

Great wealth and great learning may add to a man's happiness, fame is an accident that comes regardless of either. He who has Tme. The Magna Charata is the greatest document in the history and sceured to EEngland the supreme blessing of goverrmment by the people. Yet the rude barons who framed this immortal work ound not, in mane yinstances, sign their own names. The Duke of Marlborough, who in the recmof Anne spread the fame of English rms around the world and became the greatest man in the histor his own time, had never read a history of the nation he made esaw acted in the plays of Shakespeare. Napoleon the was wha te world all a.tremble at the sound of his name, but at the age oo

THE "NEWSPAPER" OF THE FUTURE In Budapesth, Austria-Hungary, a city of 700,000 inhabitants, there is a "newspaper") which employs neither paper, press, type or ink to furnish the news. Instead it sends all the news, of the world to its subscribers through the telenhone. It is not a mere fad or toy for the select few, bot a agreat fournal with nos established ystern of newss undred and forty miles of telephone wire and the actual cost to ing until eleven at night the news supply is continuous, nancial news is given, at another national, domestic, sporting o gitter and a skillful player entertains the subseribers at the oth end of the wire. The enterprise has proven such a decided success that preparations are being made to extend it over the whole that prep country.

The sage of the Punxsutawney Spirit says: "The nearest nfinite compassion for others. Selfishness and the pursuit of the gnis fatuus called pleasure invite and nourish the ennui they seek o avoid. Kindness is the only quality that pays compound interest on the investment. As surly and selfish persons grow old the hearts of their friends grow cold, and they become more and more lonely as they journey down the slope toward the wide ocean ver young, and need not listen in vain for fellow footfalls. When are many sincere mourners, for a genuine loss has been sustained. A helpful spirit, a comforter, a sympathetic soul has gone trom us and the void cannot be filled..
