WOMEN
 A Famous Chicken Raiser. To retire to the country and raise chickens is the ideal of many world-weary people, and one is not surprised therefore, to learn that one of the favorite occupations of Mary Anderson Navarro is chicken raising. She spends hours in the company of these pets, and has designed her own runs and coops. She does not sell her eggs or chickens, but gives to her friends and to the poor what she does not require for her own table. Mrs. Navarro's home is in Broadway, England, and the people of the village think it a great privilege to get one of her chickens.

Jeweled Ornaments.
 Imitation jewels are lavishly used in the tassels, buttons, buckles and other ornaments that are striking features of the smartest gowns, and rhinestones are as plentiful as leaves in Valcambrosa. Though their jewels make no pretence to be real, many of these ornaments are very high priced, and the dame of fashion may spend as much money as she chooses in purchasing the curving buckle for the high girdle, her big buttons, the tassels for her sash, the clasps for her pelierine or the buckles for her shoes. Many of the fringes are very expensive, especially those in crystal and in pearl.

New Business for Women.
 "A new business for women has originated in Providence," said a member of the New Century club. "What is it?" asked another member. "It is the business of being a social secretary."
 "She is one who looks after the life of a big firm's employees outside of the factory or store. She helps the girls to get comfortable rooms and good food. She introduces them to the right sort of people. She leads their minds into the right channel."
 "A big Providence firm got a social secretary recently. The young woman makes it her duty to know personally all the firm's employees. She makes it her duty to help them have clean, happy, healthy lives. She is kept very busy, and she draws a big salary; but the members of the firm say that the amount of her salary is more than repaid to them in the augmented happiness and contentment of their employees."—Philadelphia Record.

The 1830 Collar.
 Efforts were made last summer to introduce the 1830 collar, and some measure of success attended the movement. Its friends will try it again this season. What dressmakers style the 1830 collar is really a scarf. It is a straight scarf, or length of material shortened up lengthways and sideways by being drawn up in numerous rows of shirring. The shirring should be executed over cotton cord; "lamp wick," old style, has been used for the purpose, but any cable cord heavy enough will serve the turn. The scarf is then fitted on the shoulders and pinned down where the lines prove becoming. It is then popularly supposed to become a "collar," vice scarf resigned. After being spread out collarwise it should be sewed in place. From the ends of the collar spring the scarf ends, which are produced by the width or fullness of the scarf, unconfined from the shirring process. The ends look like a little flounce. They are allowed to hang to a depth of an eighth of a yard, and are then clipped off, turned up and finished with a simple hem.

The New Wrist Bags.
 Those odd little bags from Japan, over which women are raving, are not going to oust the wrist bags. These simply make themselves prettier than ever and complacently say, "You can't resist me."
 And latest things in wrist bags are beauties. And every woman who has the price will own one. For a long time leading jewelers have been trying to make the beaded bag fashionable; but the vogue grew slowly. However, there is such a rush for old-fashioned things this season that the bead bag, reminiscent of the quaint beaded roll-cule of our grandmothers' day, would have been sure to have seen in demand even had the fashion not already been well started. Combined, however, these forces have lifted it into the front ranks of accessories approved by fashion.
 Like all the old-time modes that have come again, these bead bags have been beautified, made more artistic, and the colors in them are delightfully blended. There is a restraint in the patterns which aforesaid riotous with blue roses and green tulips.
 One of the loveliest designs is a bag all in gold beads, with fleur de lis in blue. Another has gold beads and pearl beads in narrow diagonal stripes. These pearl beads are quite a new feature. They are not the seed pearls, but tiny mother of pearl affairs. They give the most delightful shimmering opalescent surface. These often form the background, and in them are imbedded the faintest, most perfectly colored bead flowers. One had morning glories in the soft pinks and odd blues of this flower, with a few delicate green leaves. Another had just a design of leaves in faint soft greens, which, with the gold mounting and chain, made the most exquisite combination possible.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

The Feeding of the Baby.
 If all babies were exactly alike, the problem of feeding them would lose its uncertainties and terrors, writes Helen Hatmaker Klein in Good Housekeeping. But they differ very greatly in their requirements, and it is impossible to formulate exact rules as to what, how much, and how often they should be fed. These questions must be settled in each case by observation of the child, and it must be remembered that the statements of careful writers on these points are intended as suggestions rather than definite rules.
 Improper feeding, unfortunately, does not always show immediate bad effects. Nature condones, but sooner or later metes out full measure of punishment. Many children seem to thrive on pastry and sweets, growing faster than those who are more carefully fed. If they are poor sleepers, their mother thinks their restlessness is caused by teething. If they are irritable, she attributes the irritability to original indigestion. If they are very sick when they have the measles, and are not "themselves" again for many weary weeks, she either concludes that she has "had luck," or reasons that as they caught it from Mary Smith, who had a slight attack, they must of necessity have a serious case. She has always heard that alternate cases were severe. As she has no data to show how much more healthy her children might have been, had they been correctly fed, she does not suspect that their diet may be the cause of all these trials.

Fashion Notes.
 Hand-painted parasols are very new and costly.
 Iridescent chiffon is a striking stuff, especially suitable for hat trimming.
 Taffeta is one of the newest linings for gowns of diaphanous fabrics.
 Lace sleeves and revers are favored trimming ideas for gowns of wool fabrics.

 Gun metal colorings in swell, neat designs are to be among the most stylish of summer stockings.
 Chromo buttons, representing the head of a small animal or an insect, are the latest from Paris.
 The forget-me-not turban is the latest and for the moment the most desirable addition to floral hats.
 Colored maline, especially pale blue, is quite fashionable at present for facing the under brims of hats.
 A new stole model is the very latest and most exclusive design for a chiffon, ostrich or marabout boa.
 Pendant ornaments, as well as heavy cords and tassels, are in the front rank among garnitures.
 An effective shade of coral pink, trimmed in black, is among the swag-gest newcomers among summer costumes.
 Scotch effects, touch and colors in Yankee homespun, rival the imported ones in style, and will be very popular for outing frocks.
 The white cloth coat, the tamine and the linen coat (the latter very new and smart), are prominent features of all fashion displays.
 Pongee, so exceedingly fashionable this year, may be had, not only in its natural color, but also in dull, soft green, blue, royal blue and pink.
 The novelty of the season in fabric gloves is of silk in short or elbow length, embroidered in self or contrasting colors, but not likely to be worn.
 The correctly gowned woman nowadays requires three, if not four, walking suits, a heavier weight for winter, lighter weight for spring and autumn, and a linen or silk for midsummer.

CAN'T BEAT THE GATE.
 Devices to Defeat Trickery at St. Louis World's Fair.
 If the person lives who can beat his way into the coming World's fair, its managers will pay well for his system. Every device to defeat trickery, to assure accuracy and save time has been employed by Director Gregg of the Division of Concessions and Admissions. When you pass through the turnstile an electric message of your arrival is flashed by underground wires to a dial tower, where it is instantly registered. Any hour, any moment of any day in the entire exposition period, you may know at a glance how many thousands have entered the gates at the precise minute of your curiosity. The same clock will tell you the total number of persons who have paid to see the great show from its inauguration until the second that the eyes have sought the automatic record. Around the walls of the dial house where these records are mechanically centralized for instant inspection, one may read "Adult No. 1," "Children No. 2," over the clock-like face of dials colored red and blue and green. Red may mean the east of Forest Park gateway. "No. 1 Adult" signifies the turnstile numbered one in the series at that particular gate, and "No. 2 children" is the official designation of the stilet at the same gate to be used exclusively for half rate tickets. For there are stiles for the youngsters and stiles for automobiles; only one class of admission can pass one class of stiles. The corresponding dial in the central office registers only one kind of admission.
 When the gates of the exposition are closed at night no lightning calculators will cast up the sum of the day's business; not a scrap of paper will be needed in this mechanical bookkeeping. A single reading of the dials on the wall to an operator at an adding machine in the centre of the room will give immediately the earnings of the exposition between 7 a. m. and midnight. Each dial carries its grand total of admissions as the months of the show slip away, besides the total of the last day's business. The summary of admissions is carried forward at the end of every 24 hours by the adding machine. The network of buried electric wires has told the story of finance. So has each turnstile at every gateway. In the top of the metal dial post a cyclometer has registered every quarter turn of the four-spoked wheel.
 Each ticket received by the stilet-keeper has been perforated as it entered the slot of the chopper box. The ticket has been utterly cancelled. The numbers on the cyclometer must correspond with the cancelled tickets and thus the check is absolute.
 Go to the exposition with your children. Try to keep a tight hold of your heart's delight, to avoid losing her in the crowd, and attempt to carry her by a gate. You are stopped immediately by the stilet keeper. An inspector takes her arm and leads her to the children's stilet. A pretty matron on the other side receives the apple of your eye and keeps her in charge until you have entered the grounds, when girle is handed over safe and sound.
 It is necessary. You must register a full admission to the dial house and she a half rate. Her electric wire has flashed her arrival; yours has ticked 50 cents more into the enormous receipts of the big show.—St. Louis Republic.
