First Load of Coke Over B. & S. Lane Taken Out the Past Week.

Two sled loads of ladies representing the Clear Run Sewing Circle, drove down from DuBois last Tuesday. They stopped with Mrs. J. M. Loghry and spent the day in a social gathering. Mrs. Loghry is a member of the circle, but since moving to this place has been unable to be present at its regular meetings. After being served to an excellent lunch and spending a season in singing and prayer, and after promising to come again, the ladies returned to their homes much pleased with their visit.

On last Tuesday the first coke from the new B. & S. works was shipped over that Co.'s line. The train consisted of eleven new B. & S. cars well filled and was consigned to Buffalo. They were hauled by the Union Pacific, and eight ovens burning and are producing an excellent quality of coke. They will begin the erection of one hundred and fifty more ovens as soon as the ground hog gets through with the weather.

The entire corps of our teachers accompanied by quite a number of the pupils from room No. 4 attended the lecture given by Dr. Fess at Reynoldsville on last Tuesday evening. All speak well of the Dr. as a lecturer and all report a profitable as well as a pleasant time.

Thomas Zimmerman, who has been on the sick list, is recovering.

J. M. Loghry visited friends in DuBois Friday and Saturday.

Miss Lula Gehardt, who is teaching the Kline school, and Miss Anna Ennis, who is teaching the Phillippi school, were home over Sunday.

Miss Wise, the milliner, who was called home on account of the illness of her mother, has returned.

Samuel Reed has gone to house keeping in the Estes and Long block.

The protracted meeting at the M. E. church is still progressing. On Sunday evening last three more persons were baptized and taken into the church. There has been forty-seven persons at the altar and nearly all have been converted.

Sheffer, of DuBois, has opened a meat market in the Estes and Long building.

H. Alex Stoke, the druggist of Reynoldsville, has opened a branch store in the Estes and Long building, and is now prepared to serve the general public.

The new bank building is nearing completion.

Sheriff J. W. Curry, of Brookville, was in town one day last week.

An Historic Bridge

The Long Bridge at Washington, around which Cluster the Memories of Many Famous Events, of Virginia the Battlefield of the Nation.

WRITTEN FOR THE STAR, BY BION H. BUTLER.

Washington is entering an epoch of improvement which will greatly add to the magnificent appearance of the city. But at the same time some of the most treasured institutions will pass into memory. It is now a quarter of a century since I saw for the first time the Long Bridge that reaches south from Washington across the Potomac, and to all of Dixie. I have seen other famous crossings since then—the bridge at Omaha, where the East was once connected with the West by the Union Pacific Railroad, when that was the only road across the Continent; the bridges across the Niagara River, connecting two nations; the London Bridge, which is a wondrous thoroughfare; and many others. But the only one that has ever awakened such sentiments as the Long Bridge at Washington is perhaps the Sultan's Bridge across the Golden Horn in Constantinople—a bridge on which all the earth meets more completely than in any other spot. At the Golden Horn the locomotive from civilized Europe greets the camel train from the interior of Asia Minor. The Turk and the Christian stand aside together to let the Sultan's giant negro factorum pass by in state. Templar and Saracen, Russian Jew and American missionary touch elbows on the bridge which makes easy a way that men have followed since the first days of history. As nearly all there is of history in the Old World has at one time or another echoed to the bridge at the Golden Horn, so in the New World, nearly all that is worth while in history has been reflected against the crossing at Washington. History in the United States almost commenced at the Long Bridge.

The transition from the North to Washington is gradual. But the step from Washington across the Potomac is a step into a new world. The bridge that connects the shores of the stream connects Virginia with the United States. Virginia is of the South. The air is fragrant with the sweet incense of burning pine—an odor that the old soldier would hail even now with delight, for he knows that there is no fuel to compare with the pine knots that warmed him in the peninsula and the wilderness. At this season a little snow whitens the ground in places in Northern Virginia. But the air is clear, and the pine forests, broken here and there by the dilapidation of some old plantation, inspire the wild instincts of man to long for a week in such surroundings with a dog and a gun. The river is alive with water fowl, and the cars are enlivened by the curious interest of the passengers, a large proportion being tourists on their first voyage southward.

There are plenty of people who go to Europe who have never seen their own country. Such are unfortunate. It is lamented that we have in America no past, and therefore nothing to excite the attention of the traveler. America has moved more rapidly than Europe. That is all. We have here just as much of history, for we have here just as great a nation, and just as advanced a people. That the achievement has taken but four centuries signifies nothing. There is a fascination in tracing the story of Waterloo while wandering over the scene of that memorable battle. But the defeat of Cornwallis in Virginia is a more fascinating event to the man who is studying the uprising of nations. Waterloo was the downfall of a sovereign. Yorktown was the creation of such an empire as the world never saw before. That empire is that United States. That battlefield is Virginia. What has the Old World to show to compare with it?

Virginia was the beginning of the United States. At Jamestown the first permanent English settlement was made three hundred years ago, although an effort had been made long before that to establish colonies in North Carolina. Virginia was in armed rebellion against the mother government a century before the Declaration of American Independence brought the actual freedom of the colonies. Virginia has been so associated with the making of the matchless empire which is now the United States that the first impulse of the thoughtful man who crosses by the Long Bridge for the first time is one of profound admiration for the page that is unfolded before him.

The Potomac is a noble stream. So wide at places that it looks like a great lake, it is fitly set in a region of hill and lowland. On the broad sweeps the Fairfaxes and Masons and Washingtons made their plantations and lived in princely style before western Pennsylvania was half explored. It was the young Virginia planter and militiaman, George Washington, that traversed the wilds of the Allegheny valley to gather information about the French forts along the river, and to warn the French at their Venango county post that the English would not tolerate French aggression in the Ohio valley.

Soon after the bridge has been passed the train puffs up at Alexandria. Here is a town of unlimited claim upon the time of the traveler. It was Washington's nearest town, for Alexandria was of relatively greater importance one hundred and fifty years ago than it is now. Here Washington was restryman in the church. Here he fell in with the British officers who were to be his companions in arms in his Pennsylvania campaigns. Washington was a Virginian, as were his father, his grandfather and his great grand father before him.

Later it was in Alexandria that Col. Ellsworth was killed, when on a May morning in 1801 the Union forces made their move to occupy the town and cut off the possibility of rebel attack from this direction. The death of Ellsworth was almost as momentous an epoch in the rebellion as the attack on Fort Sumpter, for it showed that bloodshed was one of the factors of war.

The fall of the brave zouave officer aroused the nation. Troops were hurried across the Long Bridge, and the country up and down the Potomac for thirty miles was fortified with line after line of defenses, and the locality made famous by the long years of association with Washington, and which had been foremost in overthrowing the French in America and in gaining freedom from the British domination was one factor in the greatest war ever fought. Within a few miles of Alexandria are the battlefields of Bull Run, Gainesville, Drainesville and others, while farther South come the Wilderness, Chancellorsville, Fredericksburg and all of the Virginia peninsula. Wars have made history from time immemorial, and as Virginia—the oldest of the States—has been in nearly everything big enough to be called a war in the United States, so Virginia has contributed all of her share in making not only the history of the country but in making the country itself.

It is folly to go abroad to study the history of nations until our own country has been thoroughly traversed, for in no way is the old world more interesting. No other country can show such great development, nor can any other show such a humble beginning. That we have packed our history into a space of three centuries while Europe covers ten times that many is of no consequence. We have here the whole story just as completely and with infinitely greater results. And a lot of it is visible at the end of the Long Bridge.

A STATEMENT.

J. L. Shaffer Defines his Position on the Question of his Residence.

To the voters of Winslow Township:

Having received the nomination on the Republican ticket for Justice of the Peace in Winslow township, and wishing that you may not misunderstand or be deceived as to my being a resident of Winslow township long enough to qualify me for the office of Justice of the Peace, I desire to make the following statement:

I was born and raised in Winslow township and resided therein until 1892, when I was out of the state for a period of six years; on my return in 1892 I was again a resident of the township and continued to reside therein until May 18th, 1903, when I was absent from home out of the state until on or before the 10th of February A. D. 1904 when I returned to my home in Winslow township in Sykesville, Pa., and have been a resident of that township ever since, so that by the 10th of February, 1905, I will have been one year since I returned. Since 1898 I have owned property in the township and have paid taxes on the same ever since, and during my last absence from home I never considered that I had lost my residence as I had never taken up a residence elsewhere.

J. L. SHAFFER.

Jefferson County, Pa.

On this 4th day of February, 1905, before me a Notary Public, in and for the County of Jefferson, personally appeared J. L. Shaffer, who being by me sworn in due form of law, deposes and says that the facts as above stated are true and correct.

J. L. SHAFFER.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 4th day of February, 1905.

SMITH M. MCCREIGHT,
Notary Public.

My commission expires Jan. 30, 1909. Qualifications of Justices of the Peace.

No township or borough shall elect more than two Justices of the Peace without the consent of a majority of the qualified electors within such township or borough; no person shall be elected to such office, unless he shall have resided within the township or borough for one year next preceding his election. Article 5, Section 11, Constitution.

See Small's Legislative Hand Book of 1901, page 494.

Fraud Exposed.

A few counterfeiters have lately been making and trying to sell imitations of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, and other medicines, thereby defrauding the public. This is to warn you to beware of such people, who seek to profit, through stealing the reputation of remedies which have been successfully curing disease, for over 35 years. A sure protection, to you, is our name on the wrapper. Look for it, on all Dr. King's or Bucklen's remedies, as all others are mere imitations. H. E. Bucklen & Co., Chicago, Ill., and Windsor, Canada. H. Alex Stoke, druggist.

Postmaster S. E. Shankle will move to his farm in Clarion county in the near future. We are sorry to see him leave our town and wish him success.

Grave Trouble Foreseen.

It needs but little foresight, to tell, that when your stomach and liver are badly affected, grave trouble is ahead, unless you take the proper medicine for your disease, as Mrs. John A. Young, of Clay, N. Y., did. She says: "I had neuralgia of the liver and stomach, my heart was weakened, and I could not eat. I was very bad for a long time, but in Electric BROTHERS, I found just what I needed, for they quickly relieved and cured me." Best medicine for weak women. Sold under guarantee by H. Alex Stoke, druggist, at 50c a bottle.
