AN ITALIAN VIEW OF THE "BLACK HAND"

"La Trinacria," one of the Leading Italian Journals of Pittsburg, Pleads for Sane and Sensible Treatment for Italians Unjustly Accused of being Allied with this Society.

There is hardly a murder in which an Italian is involved in some way or other that is not at once, thoughtlessly and recklessly attributed to the so-called "Black Hand" Society by the American newspapers. This seems to be their pet hobby and they feel that a good day's work has been accomplished when they announce in big, red glaring letters some crime committed by the "Black Hand"—something which exists only in their imagination—in fact it is a delusion that has gotten a stronghold on the minds. The public is heartily sick of reading of the "Black Hand," "Camorra," "Mafia," etc. They no longer take any stock in such foolish news items, therefore it is about time for such newspapers to give something original—to give facts that are true—the old tactics have been worked to death. Of course we do not want to be understood as saying that this is done intentionally in every instance—for a great part of it is attributable to sensational and incompetent reporters who desire to show their alertness and ability in writing up cases and to a few detectives and policemen who have a craving appetite to see their names in print, and thus make statements unwarranted by the facts and circumstances.

If these newspapers would pause for a moment and seriously consider the effect of such articles, they would indeed be cautious and refrain from such morbid and gruesome publications unless there were reasonable and probable cause for the belief in the "truth and existence" of the Black Hand organization and its connection with the particular crime then in question. The purpose and scope of the newspaper is a grand one, and as an educational factor, exerts a most powerful influence on the reading public, who, strange as it may seem, are prone to believe more readily what they see in print than what they hear by word of mouth—this is only another reason why the newspapers should be careful. Take for example, the murder of Frank Ricci in Bloomfield, whose dead body was found last Monday morning with a knife wound over his heart. The Pittsburg newspapers at once came out with "Black Hand!" "Vendetta!" etc. Some papers said he was a vagrant, others that he was the leader of the Pittsburg Sicilians, in fact they conflicted with each other on every material fact in the crime and they cannot all be true—someone lied, and in every instance disparaging terms are used. Their motto seems to be "False news is better than no news." In their efforts to out-rival each other they lose sight of the truth, dish out unfounded statements, distort the true object of journalism, create more prejudices between Italians and Americans, estrange the good-will and friendship that can exist between them, trample under foot the true American policy—which is to encourage the Italians of this country for American development and citizenship. For no concern of this country is more momentous and urgent than the distribution and education of her foreign element—and such "yellow" articles will not accomplish it.

"La Trinacria" made a careful investigation of the Bloomfield murder and learned that the dead man was no vagrant nor the leader of the Pittsburg Sicilians—he is an Abruzzese, having been born in Atelete, Province of Aquila, (Abruzzo) and had been in this country nearly 15 years, and about 2 years ago was a wanderer for Bruno Posteraro.

Instead of the "Black Hand" it was found that Frank Ricci, a laborer, came to his death through an affair involving drink and women for James Waters, is now accused of the murder. Can the Pittsburg newspapers explain why on Monday they connected the crime to that hobby of theirs, the "Black Hand," and on Tuesday announced the arrest of James Waters, an Irishman, accused of the murder? Did he belong to the Black Hand?—Pittsburg La Trinacria.

MONDAY MORNING.

Is It a Bad Time to Approach a Man on Business?

"Come in and see me Monday morning and we'll talk it over," said Gassaway, but Blinks replied:

"Couldn't you make it Tuesday morning or Monday afternoon?"

So it was arranged for Tuesday morning. Blinks turned from the telephone to me with a smile, saying:

"I'm glad he didn't make it Monday morning. We would never come to a conclusion then. You see," he continued, noting my surprise at such a statement, "Monday morning is the morning after Sunday. Never approach a man on business on Monday morning."

"I can't explain why it is, but every man goes to his office on Monday morning with a grouse. I suppose it's because he's been resting up all day Sunday and sort of hates to tear himself away from it. Anyway, I know it is so. 'Take your own case. I've known you many years, and whenever you meet me Monday morning I notice that you are yawning, yawning and yawning. You had a good Sunday no doubt. Either you rested to beat the band or played golf or did something. Anyway, that took your mind off your business cares. Then you went to bed rather early, all prepared to get up early Monday. When the clock went off you were miserable about rising, and when you did get up you were ugly to everybody. It's the same way with all of us. We rest too hard Sundays. Instead of just relaxing a little we let everything of the week go and fall all to pieces in doing what we call recouping. It's the great American habit."

"That's the reason we have 'blue Mondays.' Some day, I suppose, we'll learn how to rest up over Sunday without completely disorganizing our work for Monday. If we don't I think it would be a good idea to cut Monday out of the business week and begin on Tuesday."—New York World.

READING THE TREE.

How the Forester Gets Its Life History in Detail.

The forester reads the history of a tree in great detail, says the American Magazine. After taking out a few "borings" to the center of the tree at different heights and counting the rings on them he may spin you such a yarn as this:

"This tree is 150 years old (150 rings at the base). During the first five years it grew only seven inches (145 rings, seven inches from the base). Evidently it then began to touch crowns with other saplings, for it took a spirit and put on fifteen inches a year steadily till it was forty years old (forty rings forty-four and one-half feet above the ground). It was not growing as fast as its neighbors, however, for at this point it began to be overshadowed, and its growth declined for the next ten years to as little as four inches a year (forty-five rings at forty-eight feet and fifty at fifty feet). Just in time to save its life something happened to its big neighbors, presumably a windstorm, and it resumed a steady growth of about six inches a year, having passed its fastest growing time. Its growth in thickness doesn't seem to have varied much, about an inch every three years. But it grew faster and faster in volume, of course, as its height increased—a little over a cubic foot a year in its prime of life. I should judge. About thirty years ago it reached maturity and stopped growing in height (thirty rings at the top of the main stem), and now it is approaching old age (the last rings are pretty thin). Hold on a minute—here's a false ring, twenty, forty, forty-six years back; two very thin rings—soon—instead of one thick one; means that something interrupted the growing season, probably a late frost."

The Drug Clerk.

In the old days the drug clerk spent his spare moments in pounding leaves and barks for the production of tinctures and extracts that are now supplied by wholesale manufacturers. When he had nothing else to do he made ointment and rolled pills. The mortar and pestle were the universal sign of the trade. But the diverse modern activities of the pharmacist more than compensate for the earlier details of toil. It is still a time honored practical jest to ask the apprentice to powder ten pounds of camphor in a mortar. After sweating at his task for an hour or two he learns that camphor won't powder, though it is readily soluble in alcohol.—New York Tribune.

Some Worms Are Curious.

The most curious creature of the worm family is the diplozoon, a singular parasite which infests the gills of several species of fish, particularly the bream. Each individual diplozoon has two distinct bodies united in the middle so as to form a perfect St. Andrew's cross, each half of the creature containing precisely the same kind of organs—viz, an alimentary canal, a venous system, reproductive organs, etc.

Lucky.

Of Absorbing Interest.

"Aside from the principle involved and in addition thereto," remarked the great financier, "the banking business is one of absorbing interest."—Toledo Blade.

DUDES OF OTHER TIMES.

Dress of a Dandy of the Early Nineteenth Century.

A cure for the confirmed rafter lacking modern dress might be a course of inspection through a file of old fashion magazines or the perusal of such accounts as are given by the author of "Sketches of Lynn." The description is that of a suit worn in the first part of the nineteenth century.

The boots were an important article of dress. The toes were made as broad as the ball of the foot, with the corners well rounded, giving the shoe the resemblance to the snout of a shovel-nosed shark. They were very snug and required strong straps. In order to get into a fashionable pair the heel of the stocking was well soaped and some pulverized soap sprinkled into the boot. The length of time it took to get one on depended on the strength of the owner and the strap.

The stylish overcoat displayed five capes, one above the other. The trousers were expected to fit as tight as the skin. Just how they were put on is a mystery. The coat was especially snug under the sleeves, and the velvet collar scraped up the back of the head. The ruffled overcoats after a little wear, became as stiff as birch bark.

The thing worn about the neck was called a stock. This name was appropriate in its suggestion of an instrument of punishment. The stock was from three to six inches high, and was made stiff. A man was forced to look straight ahead. Only by careful management could he see a little on either side. About halfway between his eyes and ears two little points of collar stuck up like toothpicks.

Ruffled bosoms and wristbands finished the costume, with the addition of a tall silk hat. When enclosed in this manner, with a dash of attar of roses on his handkerchief, the man of the period was considered irresistible.

TOO HUMBLE A HUSBAND.

Position of Prince Albert, Royal Consort of Queen Victoria.

A woman looked up with a laugh from a heavy volume she was reading. "Now I know," she said, "why Queen Victoria was so fond of the prince consort. This husband did not merely regard his wife as his equal; he regarded her as immeasurably his superior, saying that it was his duty to sink his own individual existence in her. Listen to this letter that Prince Albert wrote to the Duke of Wellington. Here is a champion of woman's rights indeed. Don't you think, though, it is going too far for a man to humble himself so low as this?"

She then read from her book in a sarcastic voice:

My Dear Duke—In the question whether it is advisable that I should take the command of the army I have come to the conclusion that my decision ought entirely to be guided by the consideration whether it would interfere with or assist my position of consort to the sovereign. This position is a most peculiar and delicate one. While a female sovereign has a great many disadvantages in comparison with a king, yet if she is married and her husband understands and does his duty her position, on the other hand, has many compensatory advantages and in the long run will be found to be stronger even than that of the male sovereign. But this requires that the husband should entirely sink his own individual existence in that of his wife and that he should aim at no power by himself or for himself, being content to be the husband of the queen, the private secretary of the sovereign and the tutor of the royal children.

Napoleon was a major at twenty-four, general of brigade at twenty-five and commander in chief of the army of Italy at twenty-six. He achieved all his victories and was finally overthrown before the age of forty-one.

Frederick the Great ascended the throne at twenty-eight, terminated the first Silesian war at thirty and the second at thirty-three. Ten years later, with a population of but 5,000,000, he triumphed over a league of more than 100,000,000 people.

The cage should be thoroughly cleaned every morning, placing a piece of clean brown paper, not newspaper, on the bottom. Perches should also be washed daily.
