Long Gloves of Pig and Dog Skin With Elbow Sleeves.

NEW IDEA IN THEATER HATS

Cloth Trimmings on Thin Fabrics a Novelty—The Narrow Belt Has Had Its Day—The New Corsets Lace Up In Front.

Some of the new elbow length kid gloves are embroidered in medallions of white silk battenberg braid, forming a vine running toward the elbow. Another style of embroidery is made with black and white silk thread interwoven, forming a bracelet effect around the wrist of the glove. Above the wrist the silk is arranged in a pretty design.

The long dog and pigskin gloves for morning, business and outdoor usage are a novelty and are most serviceable for wear with short sleeve jackets. These gloves fasten with neat brass clasps that give to the skins a stunning effect which buttons could not lend.

A new wrinkle in dress shoes is seen in a leading shop. The vamp, which is of patent leather, extends in the shape of a tongue well up over the instep, and the lacing starts from the top of the tongue, across which are narrow straps fastened with buckles.

Wash waists to be worn with taller made gowns are leaning toward masculine severities, for a number have the stiff, tucked fronts of men's shirts. The suit illustrated is carried out in cadet blue serge. The skirt is a gored circular trimmed with bias straps of the material between bands of fancy black soutache braid. The short pony jacket has the same trimming treatment. The neck is finished with bands of stitched panne velvet edged with platings of taffeta. A smart bow of black velvet ties in front.

THE PERENNIAL BLOUSE. One of the new walking suits is of blue broadcloth and has a plaited skirt and a jaunty postillon coat with a deep belt of black satin. The front and Back of the coat are braided in arabesques in black, and there are rows of tiny silver buttons on either side of the front of the coat, which has a vast of biscuit colored cloth.

In order to overcome the objections to headgear in the theater, modistes have created what is known as the Hippitan theater hat. These little hats are formed of a bandeau or simply a twist of ribbon or velvet and have by way of trimming an egret, a single tip or a small cluster of roses.

One of the most attractive of the season's blouses is illustrated. It is equally pretty carried out in silk or any lightweight material. The fronts are platted from a yoke and empiement of the fabric edged with a bias band of striped silk. A tiny vest fastened with three silk covered buttons is a fetching addition and gives a distinctive touch, together with the collar of lace and silk.

FOR MADEMOISELLE. Cloth trimmings are noted on crepe de chine gowns and also on such thin fabrics as mousseline de soie and tulle.

The only change seen in the winter ruff of malines is a trimming of satin folds that, matching the ruff material

A SCHOOLGIRL'S HAT.

In color, edges every closely plaited fold and supplies long streamers with which to fasten it. Marabou and ostrich boas are legion, very wide and fluffy for carriage use, but narrow and rosy for street wear.

Furriers have designed many fanciful scarf draperies and little shoulder wraps in fur, fur and cloth, fur and lace and fur and chiffon to take the place of the scarfs and little coats and draped shoulder wraps of silk, etc., which have had such a vogue.

The manufacturers have reckoned upon an extensive market for two piece frocks of sheer wool or silk to be worn with separate coats. As a result an unusual supply of voiles, eolienne and other similar fabrics are to be found in the shops.

A new idea in furs is the introduction of straps of silk and velvet outlining the seams of little fur coats.

The narrow belt has seen its day on gowns, the high plaited girdle having taken its place.

The suspender dress that combines a washable blouse is a practical and pretty idea for a girl's costume.

The hat illustrated is a smart model for a young girl. It is a claret red beaver trimmed with shaded red and black ribbon in a soft wide width.

THE JAUNTY BEAVER. The newest corsets lace up the front. They are especially designed for wear with princess frocks. The solid back gives a flat effect that is very much sought after.

A pair of corsets sent over by a Parisian corsetiere sells for the modest sum of $4.00. The material is of white brocade. The stays are of gold and the hooks of the same precious metal

BLACK BEAVER HAT.

Inset with diamond chips. The garter buckles are of gold, with tiny sparks glittering in them.

After an inspection of the season's millinery one wonders where there is a woman brave enough to risk even her average good looks under the huge and heavy hats that are thought so smart.

The new combination of yellow and red velvet used as a piping appears on the collars of handsome suits. These shades are particularly good style on a gay and black checked costume.

The real touch of smartness on tweed suits is a vivid green or yellow collar edged with soutache. Broadcloth allows of more elaborate trimming than the rougher materials, and one's fancy may have full play on such a gown.

Street skirts are laid in every known plait to make a tremendous spring from the hips. Box or single, inverted and outside, stitched and loose, all sometimes on the same skirt, is the fashion.

The smart little hat illustrated is one of the fetching shapes of the season. It is carried out in black silk beaver and trimmed with a scarf of grass green chiffon that falls low over the hair. Shaded green and black wings are perched jauntily at one side.

The Social Objections to Mrs. Tripp

(Original.)

Mrs. Muggleton Mason was one of the elite of Groveton. There were disadvantages to be overcome in attaining and maintaining this position, but Mrs. Mason possessed the special faculties required to overcome them. For instance, her husband was a horse trader—a horse trader on a large scale, to be sure, but still a horse trader. When the wife of a wholesale grocer threw this in the face of Mrs. Mason, that lady retorted: "My husband buys and sells horses; your husband buys and sells molasses. What's the difference?"

One evening on the train from the city where Mrs. Mason had been shopping she was talking to Mrs. Edwards, also a member of the smart set of Groveton. Mrs. Edwards was not only wealthy, but her family had been wealthy before her for a hundred years. Mrs. Mason appreciated this and proposed to ingratiate herself with the highborn dame by a bit of social conservatism.

"There are some of our set," said Mrs. Mason—her voice was loud and harsh—"who are constantly upholding some one trying to get in with us who doesn't belong with us. Several of our best ladies are visiting with that young Mrs. Tripp, whose efforts to appear respectable are absurd. At the Arlington's reception she wore a dress that I recognized as having once belonged to Mrs. Chesborough. She'd so changed and improved it that one would have scarcely recognized it. Not that I would deny such people a place among us, provided they can live as we do, but they can't. Besides, Mrs. Tripp doesn't give a very satisfactory account of her husband's continued absence. Land knows whether she's married at all or not."

Behind the two ladies sat a man in a broad brimmed hat and a woolen shirt under a coat much the worse for wear, but his features belied his costume. Notwithstanding an appearance of hard work they were intellectual.

"Moll Hogan, I believe," he said, bending forward and looking Mrs. Mason in the eye as she turned, with a face alternately white and scarlet.

"I don't know you," she said, drawing away with poorly assumed hauteur. "Nevertheless you have served me with antelope steak and flapjacks in Grindstone. But I see you are changed. I heard you had married Mrs. Mason, that he drove a lot of horses east just in time to fill a big order for the government before the Spanish war and that he has been making money in horseflesh ever since."

Mrs. Mason was taken flat aback. She made several efforts to clear herself from the man's imputations and finally muttered that he had got her mixed with some one else. Then she turned her back on him and said to Mrs. Edwards:

"He is some enemy who has an object, but I can't guess what it is."

The train was at the moment stopping at a station. The two ladies alighted, each taking her carriage to her home.

Mrs. Atwater, one of the ladies who had been helping Mrs. Tripp in her efforts to keep up a position to which she had been born, gave a ball. Mrs. Mason was there, and Mrs. Tripp was there. Mrs. Tripp started the assembly by entering dressed in a gown fresh from the hands of its maker, but this was not the most surprising feature about Mrs. Tripp's entrance. She leaned on the arm of a gentleman unknown to the Grovetonians, whom she introduced as her husband. As the couple made their way to speak to the hostess every eye in the room was leveled at them.

"Where did she get that dress? Where on earth has the man been? Wonder if it's another case of get rich quick?" were some of the questions the guests asked of each other.

As Mr. and Mrs. Tripp walked away from the hostess they met Mr. and Mrs. Mason walking up to her.

"Hello, Mason!" Mason stared at the speaker for some moments, then, making a virtue of necessity, said:

"Hello, Mr. Tripp! What are you doing here?"

"The cut-off's finished. Civil engineers are no longer wanted. You didn't finish the dirt moving you undertook, did you?"

"N-o," stammered Mason. "I didn't." Mrs. Mason, who by this time recognized under his evening dress the rough looking man who had spoken to her in the car, pulled her husband on.

"Goodness gracious, is that Mr. Tripp, who had charge of the cut-off?"

"Yes, and, besides being engineer in chief, he took a big contract. I had a subcontract under him to remove a million yards of dirt. I found I had bid too low and left the territory."

There was a brief pause, at the end of which the wife said:

"He's the man I told you about who knew me when I slung hash in Grindstone. I see it all now. I was objecting to his wife being received in this society, and he overheard me. He hasn't any cause to love us since you threw your contract and left him in the lurch, and I poured hot shot in his hearing at his wife. I wonder why he's been keeping her so low for dust?"

"Needed every cent he could scrape to fill his contract."

"Well," added the wife, pursuing a vernacular to which she was most accustomed, "I reckon we're done for in this corral. We'd better light out and try another."

"Reckon you're talkin' United States, Moll."

And so it was that the Masons moved to and the Tripp family moved up. NELLIE EDNA CURTIS.
