WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 30, 1907.

Though this year may hold for some of us failure, loss and bereavement, yet we may live a happy life in spite of all, if our hearts are rightly attuned.

The political parties of this borough have nominated their tickets for the spring election, February 19, and it will now be up to the voters to say who shall be elected.

There has been another advance of 10 per cent in paper and all kinds of printing stock. The wholesale houses sent out notices last week of the advance in prices.

A census bulletin recently issued at Washington shows that in 1900, 1,750,000 children in the United States between the ages of 10 and 15 years, were employed as bread-winners.

The legislature passed a bill last week enlarging the powers of county commissioners to erect county bridges and empowering them to construct new bridges when existing ones are not sufficient to accommodate traffic.

Yesterday was Carnation Day, the sixty-fifth anniversary of the birth of William McKinley, our martyred president, and the red carnation was conspicuous in the buttonhole, or pinned to the waist of men, women and children in Reynoldsville. The wearing of a carnation is a modest and yet a beautiful custom to observe in remembrance of a noble man.

According to tables prepared by the United States Geographical Survey, Pennsylvania is far ahead of any other state in the union so far as the value of her mineral products is concerned. The total output of Pennsylvania for 1906 was $569,828,673. Ohio comes next with $169,203,710, and Illinois next with $105,608,567. The mineral products of Colorado, supposed to be recking in mineral wealth, only aggregated $59,290,941.

In January 1906, from 21st to 24th, one year ago last week, we had the warmest wave ever known for that season of the year. It was a record breaker. People sat on front porches and enjoyed the balmy air, the grass was growing green on the lawns, bees and other specimens of insect life were active, but it was different on the same dates last week with the thermometer registering 15 to 20 degrees below zero.

Governor Stuart, who entered upon his duties on the 15th instant as chief executive of Pennsylvania, began his official career with a dignity and intelligence that is securing for him the confidence and respect of the people of this commonwealth, and it is hoped that he will measure up to their expectations. His recommendations to the legislature so far are progressive and in line with the greatest good to the people of the state without being revolutionary. Governor Stuart wishes it understood that it is his intention to be the executive of the whole people and that the promises of the platform which he advocated before that people shall constitute a part of his administration.

It is a question whether the citizens of another town in this section of the state have subscribed as liberally to get new industries into their town as the citizens of Reynoldsville have within the passed eight years, which shows that our citizens are interested in the future prosperity of the town. Just at present some of our citizens are discouraged because the people have been imposed on in several cases, but we should not give up the good work. Get the board of trade organized and in good working order and we will land others paying industries besides what we already have. We ought not to have trouble in inducing capitalists to come this way, as we have many natural advantages that other towns do not have. When a proposition is presented to the people for location of an industry a thorough investigation should be made, as in the Standard Tie & Equipment Co. proposition, and the townspeople will not be imposed on again.

According to the new law which went into effect on Jan. 1st all things in the food and drink line are to be pure, providing the new pure food law accomplishes the ends sought by those who framed it. Ignorance will not be tolerated as an excuse for violating the new laws. If there is any manufacturer or dealer throughout the length and breadth of the land who is not familiar with its provisions it is not the fault of the Government. Factories will be required to be open at all times for inspection. Labels must not in any way misrepresent the product to which they are attached. Artificial coloring matter in food and drink will be largely done away with. The Government is preparing for the strictest enforcement of the law. Federal inspectors will be kept busy buying samples in the open market to be tested and analyzed. The only way the retail dealer can hope to escape the penalty of the law is to be able to show that the manufacturer or wholesale dealer gave him a guarantee that the articles conformed with the regulation.

How Disease May be Spread.

"The danger of the disease—spreading common drinking cup is an old story, but the warning cannot be too frequently repeated in the hope of having it heeded by more people."

When making this statement recently, State Health Commissioner Samuel G. Dixon added that he thought more people were realizing that they jeopardized their health and lives when they drank from the common cup in railway trains, public fountains and other public places and were refusing to run the risk of contracting consumption or some other infectious disease.

He called attention to the increasing number of people who, when traveling, carried with them their own drinking cup or had a supply of inexpensive paraffin cups.

"It seems strange," said Dr. Dixon, "that so many people who would not think of wiping their face on a towel that a stranger has just used, will go to a public water cooler or fountain and drink from a tin cup that may have been used just before him by a consumptive."

"This cup probably has a turned up rim in the crevice of which the disease germs collect. The lower lip is placed under this in drinking and the germ of tuberculosis left there by some previous user of the cup is transmitted to the mouth of another."

"The federal and state health authorities have been giving the common drinking cup evil considerable attention lately and the question of what laws or rules and regulations that could be devised to bring about the abolishment of the common drinking cup has been widely discussed. In the meantime the people should be urged to protect themselves as I have pointed out, by avoiding its use."

Unwise Economy.

Perhaps you know the economical man who complains that in winter time his house is always cold. If you could watch him regulating the heater the chances are ten to one you would discover that he has a rooted prejudice against burning enough coal to make himself comfortable. He is the same man who complains of the frigid attitude of buyers toward his business, the truth being that he won't spend money in advertising to warm them up. Neither a heater nor a commercial enterprise can be run satisfactorily without an adequate supply of fuel. Unwise economy is waste. It is unwise economy to struggle along without publicity.—DuBois Express.

The "big head" is a popular way of expressing a common and very frequent ailment. It arises from various sources, but the real foundation is a lack of sense. A little money develops it in some people, a few good clothes gives it to others, a little office, where a chance is given to exercise a little authority, is often the cause of it, while others get it having a little better job than their associates. The truth is no sensible person gets the "big head." The one who becomes stuck up and stiff-necked from sources of any kind, are weak in the intellectual caliber.—New Bethlehem Leader.

Every bullet that killed a soldier struck some woman at home. So every blow of intemperance that smites a man grieves some woman who loves him. The fires go out on a home altar and a home is ruined. The fires of intemperance are as destructive to the home as the fiery element.—Venango Daily Herald.

Persons who are prone to detect vanity and pride in the conduct of others, said Plato, usually have a most abnormal leaning towards these unenviable qualities themselves, which very fact precludes the possibility of their seeing themselves as others see them.

It has been many years since there has been as great interest awakened along religious lines in Reynoldsville as there has been since the union evangelistic meetings began here a little more than two weeks ago. A tidal wave of salvation is sweeping over the town.

The Laboring Man Talks

Going my way? Yes, I'm a little late. Stopped to buy some Sealship oysters for supper.

"What are they?" Why, nothing but just the finest oysters you ever tasted in your life.

"Too dear for a workingman?" That's where you are dead wrong. They are the only oysters a poor man can afford to buy. When you buy Sealship oysters you get solid meats, and you are not paying for dirty ice water. My wife says that a pint of Sealship will go as far as a quart of any other oysters.

And as for the flavor—you come down some Sunday night and my wife will give you an oyster stew that will make you think you never tasted an oyster before.
