THE MISSOURI RIVER.

It Has a Keen Sense of Humor and a Woman's Caprice.

There are rivers of all lengths and sizes and of all degrees of wetness. There are rivers with all sorts of peculiarities and with widely varying claims to fame. But there is only one river with a personality, habits, dissipation, a sense of humor and a woman's caprice; a river that goes traveling sidewise, that interferes in politics, rearranges geography and dabbles in real estate; a river that plays hide and seek with you today and tomorrow follows you around like a pet dog with a dynamite cracker tied to its tail. That river is the Missouri.

This thing happened in Kansas City not many years ago. A party of men owned a strip of land along the Missouri river bank. It was not handsome land, but it was valuable for factory purposes. They were offered partly prices for it, but held on.

One day they noticed that the strip was getting emaciated. They held a hurried diagnosis with a surveyor's tape and found that half of it had been washed away. The next year half of the remainder had gone.

The men wanted to sell then, but the market seemed remarkably sluggish. The next year the river ate so vigorously that only a tiny strip about as wide as a piece of baby ribbon was left. The men were much depressed.

Suddenly the land began to increase. The Missouri had chosen the late manufacturing site for a place to deposit a fine 100 acre farm upon which it had foreshadowed the river. Inside of six months that strip of land contained 200 acres. The men were jubilant, but still they would not sell. They wanted another 100 acres, they said. They strolled along the bank each day and urged the river in proprietary tones to build faster.

Then the river changed its mind once more and not only wiped out the extra 100 acres, but the original 100 acres, every foot of them. The next year it built up 500 acres in the same spot, but they all belonged to the man who owned the ground behind the original plot. They have stayed there ever since—that is, up to last reports. For high financing and property juggling the Missouri makes a crooked lawyer look like a child. I hate to think what it would do for a man if it had a personal friendship for him.—George Fitch in American Magazine.

A Clever Dog.

A prominent Saginaw physician while making his morning calls a short time ago noticed a dog lying by the roadside with a wounded foot. The doctor, being something of a fancier, stopped and dressed the wound with such facilities as he had at hand and went on. The next morning, passing along the same street, he again noticed the dog in the same place. He redressed the wound, changed the bandages and left the animal as he had done before. This again happened the next morning, and also continued for several days. At last the wound reached the stage of being completely healed, and the doctor, removing the bandages, patted the dog on the head, saying, "Well, my good fellow, I guess it's all right now."

The next morning the dog was not there, and he has not been seen since. Hereafter the doctor will be more ready to believe stories of the almost human intelligence and gratitude of dogs than ever before.—Courier-Herald.

Matrimony in Central Africa.

Quails are plentiful at Lake Nyanza, and after being snared in the grass by the natives they are kept in small wicker cages strung on a long pole stuck in the ground. When a sufficient number of quails have been collected they can be exchanged with a neighbor—for all the world like coupons—for wives.—Brevet Major R. G. T. Bright, 2. M. G. in Wide World Magazine.
