

A FELLOW'S TIME.

When you were little did you have a little fellow's time? That is-I mean-a grapevine swing...

Say, did you have a little lamb, And colt, all for your own, And an old cow's sleek sides to stroke...

And was there, too, an old gray mare, A "Dobbin" or a "Kit," On whose broad back, with daddy's help...

A mother and grandmother, too? A grandpaw and a dad To take you with them to the fields...

O, meadows, fields and wooded ways, And creeks of long ago! O, awkward calves, and hissing geese...

What pleasant memories we make When age bows down the head Of him who, just a killed babe...

By CAPTAIN BARCLAY.

A STORY OF THE DEAD-ROOM.

"I presume, doctor, there are many sorrowful scenes which present themselves in your profession," I remarked to the surgeon of our regiment...

"Yes, indeed," he replied, with an air of nonchalance. "But, then, captain, you are a soldier, and you know how a fellow will get used to most anything..."

"I remember one incident in my life, when a student of medicine in a New York college," continued the doctor, "that has never been erased from my memory..."

"Now captain," continued the doctor, "I have told you the story of the dead-room. The mystery connected with the affair can only be left to conjecture."

announced in his morning lecture that a fine female subject had been obtained, and that in the afternoon he should dissect it in their presence...

"The subject had been placed on the dissecting table in the dead-room, and a white sheet carefully secured it from view..."

"The professor dwelt with warmth upon this delicate branch of medical science, and said the theme was profound and in part revealed the wonder of our creation..."

"Stepping from the platform with scrip in hand, he then advanced to the table, removed the sheet from the corpse, and while gazing on the face of the dead woman..."

"Restoratives were applied to his bloodless lips, and when he had recovered sufficiently to speak, he said: 'Gentlemen, I am ill. There will be no dissection this afternoon...'"

"What became of the dead body we never learned. It was removed that night-by whom and where to was never known by us..."

"The mystery connected with the dead-room never was fully explained. Rumor had it, but it was never fully confirmed, that the doctor's wife had deserted him in England many years previous to this event..."

"How the woman met her untimely death no one ever knew. Her par amour may have grown tired of her, as is the general report, and she may have welcomed death in a watery grave..."

"The winter season of lectures had commenced, and students from nearly every section of the United States were in the city to attend them..."
