

Silk Mill Prospects

that laborers were eager to return to their old positions; and that Reynoldsville, the city, showed public improvements which alone would stamp its people as progressive.

In behalf of the borough the mayor gave assurance of certain conveniences for the mill being granted and from all others who talked to Mr. Huber came assurances of hearty good will. Incidentally it may be remarked that had all the representatives sent here by the American Silk Co. been as frank and genial and as experienced as Mr. Huber showed himself to be, better feeling would exist to-day between the local stockholders and the big corporation.

When the company's representative left for York in the evening he left the impression that in all ways he had found Reynoldsville exceeding his expectations and that his report at the stockholders' meetings this week would place the local mill in a new light to the directors.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK

Of the Good the Local Newspaper Accomplishes? Do You Support It?

Did you ever stop to think of the good that the local newspaper accomplishes? Of the good cause that it boosts, of the good deeds that it commends, of the encouragement it lends to individuals every day by cheerful and helpful notices? And then just think, too, of the many unpleasant things that the local paper does not print because it might do someone harm or make someone feel sad. These things are not taken into account by the city daily. But it is the purpose of the local paper to do good and not evil and it often sacrifices valuable news articles out of respect for the feelings of individuals. The local paper is always anxious to print the good things about the people and reluctant to print the bad. Its object is not to do injury but to help everybody by a friendly boost just every chance it gets.—Hildway Advocate.

NEW SHORT STORIES

Champ Clark on Tobacco.

A southern tobacco grower was before the ways and means committee, arguing that a higher tariff should be placed upon Egyptian tobacco. He said the American industry needed more protection.

"Isn't it a fact that the reason Egyptian tobacco is sold in such great quantities is because so many people have cultivated a taste for it?" asked Champ Clark, leader of the house and member of the committee.

"Well, I suppose that is true," admitted the southern advocate.

"And wouldn't they insist upon getting this Egyptian tobacco in their cigarettes even if it cost more?"

"Yes," admitted the witness reluctantly.

"Well, then, what good would a higher tariff do you fellows?" asked Clark.

"Oh, it would do the country generally a lot of good. Think of how much revenue it would mean to the country?"

"OH, IT WOULD DO THE COUNTRY GENERALLY A LOT OF GOOD."

"The country would be a whole lot better off," said Clark. "If tobacco were done away with all together—if it did away with the whole thing, cigars, pipe and plug."

"Maybe you would not think so if you were a user of it," said the witness.

"I've got a good chaw of it in my mouth this minute," said Clark, carefully directing the overflow into a cuspidor. "Don't know what I would do without it" he added when the laugh had subsided.—St. Louis Republic.

Having Fun With a Banker.

Councilman F. A. Drew is fond of playing practical jokes on William H. Lee, president of the Merchants-Laclede National bank. Mr. Drew was for years a director in Mr. Lee's bank.

While the bankers were waging their recent war upon prohibition Mr. Drew late one night rang up Mr. Lee at his home and represented that he was a reporter assigned to get Mr. Lee's views on the situation.

Mr. Lee complained somewhat bitterly on being called out of bed at that hour of night to give an interview, but finally got warmed up to the subject and for thirty minutes pictured the desolation that would result in St. Louis if Missouri went dry.

"Let me see," said Mr. Drew at the conclusion of the interview; "you are Mr. William H. Lee, whisky man, aren't you?"

"No," snapped Mr. Lee; "I am Mr. William H. Lee, the banker."

"Oh," said Mr. Lee apologetically, "I am very sorry, but I wanted to talk to Mr. Lee the whisky expert and not Mr. Lee the financier."

Mr. Drew hung up the receiver before the explosion occurred at the other end of the wire.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The Professor's Lunch.

Professor William James, the famous Harvard psychologist, was giving to an attentive class remarkable instances of absent-mindedness.

"And let us not omit from our catalogue," he said, smiling, "the well known case of John Burdon Sanderson.

"John Burdon Sanderson sat at his desk in University college lost in thought. It was noon. Beside the great but absentminded student lay his frugal lunch, a sandwich. Next to the sandwich lay a frog, not dead, but motionless—it had been the subject of a curious experiment in the lecture hall an hour before.

"At noon the assistant left the professor meditating before the sandwich and the frog, and at 1, when the assistant returned, the professor was meditating still. The sandwich was unopened, but the frog—the frog had disappeared."

A Resemblance.

Canon Hensley Henson at a dinner in New Haven during his Yale lectures condemned the ugliness of the English archbishop's attire.

"One of our archbishops," he said, "preached in a Kansas church in his panoply of knee breeches, garters and apron, and the leading paper of the town concluded an admirable report of his sermon with the words: "The archbishop wore highland dress."

TRAVELING WITH TAFT

(Special Correspondence.)

It is said that President Taft left Beverly with only one speech prepared out of the hundred or more he will deliver on the trip he is now making. His friends and his political enemies alike have been watching with interest the progress of his course, which is admittedly full of political significance.

The United States has had only one president in recent years who could trust himself without fear to extemporaneous speaking. That was Benjamin Harrison, the readiest offhand speaker who ever sat in the White House and who could always be depended upon to say the right thing at the right time. President McKinley rarely set forth on a mission as important as that undertaken by President Taft without first committing some well chosen thoughts to writing. If not to memory. Even President Roosevelt, who was somewhat at home in rough and tumble oratory, devoted considerable time to preparing himself for the ordeal of speaking before going out to educate the people on his policies.

Taft as a Speaker.

It must be remembered that until President Taft went to Washington as a cabinet officer he had had little practical experience as a speaker before American audiences. His crudities as a stump speaker were generally remarked when he made his first tour of Ohio in the last national campaign. As the campaign progressed, however, the president improved as an extemporaneous speaker. He was quick to take advice from those who noticed his shortcomings as a vote catcher, and at the same time he was not without merit, his pleasing personality and the courage with which he met and handled dangerous campaign issues making up in large measure for his lack of actual practice.

In fact, actual astonishment was expressed by his friends at the clever manner in which Mr. Taft handled himself in a ten minute extemporaneous speech at the Chicago banquet at which Mr. Bryan also spoke. As long as Mr. Taft spoke offhand it was the general opinion of those who heard him that he acquitted himself fully as well as Mr. Bryan. When he concluded his remarks by reading long dissertations on how to conduct the courts his auditors lost interest immediately. During his present trip, nevertheless, Mr. Taft has been almost invariably happy in his talks, both from a local and a national view.

President Visits His Sister.

After three whole days spent in the Yosemite valley, far removed from the turmoil of parade, handshaking and public banquets, President Taft took up the routine of his tour much refreshed. After a three hours' stop at Fresno on Sunday, Oct. 10, the party entrained for Los Angeles, which was reached the following morning after an all night ride. The president was met at the station by a committee of the chamber of commerce and escorted to the home of his sister, Mrs. William A. Edwards, 2900 West Adams street, where breakfast was served.

After two hours with his sister and family the president was taken to view San Pedro, the great new harbor of Los Angeles, recently annexed to the city. He also inspected the government breakwater, the outer harbor, the inner harbor and the proposed sites for fertilizers determined upon by the war department.

Returning to Los Angeles, the president greeted the veterans of the Sawtelle Soldiers' home, where an hour was spent with the worn warriors of the civil war.

The official reception was held at the Arcade station and was followed by a parade through the business section, past the schools and through the residence districts.

After four hours' rest at his sister's home the president was the guest of honor at a banquet given by the chamber of commerce.

The next morning a special electric car took the president from the home of Mrs. Edwards to Pasadena, the first stop in a sightseeing tour, including San Bernardino, Redfield, Colton, Riverside and Glenwood.

In the Salt River Valley.

Turning his face homeward at last on Oct. 13, the distinguished traveler plunged into the territory of Arizona, where on the following day he was welcomed at Yuma by Governor R. E. Sison and a score of prominent Arizonians, including most of the higher territorial officials. Phoenix was reached about noon for a stay of a couple of hours, which was divided between a limited reception at the capitol and a swift automobile drive in the Salt river valley around Phoenix, where the greatest of all the reclamation storage projects now has assured an abundance of water for irrigation.

At the Grand Canyon.

The presidential special, traveling slowly, arrived at the Grand Canyon of the Arizona, 160 miles from Prescott, after breakfast next morning. The forenoon was spent under the head of Bright Angel trail, a thoroughfare owned by Ralph Cameron, congressional delegate from Arizona, and the afternoon in a drive along the canyon rim to Grandview, twenty miles to the eastward. The day was finished with a banquet at El Tovar hotel, given by Governor Sison, with about thirty guests, besides the presidential party. Following the banquet the presidential train returned to the main line at Williams, to which point came Governor Curry of New Mexico, with several carloads of welcoming New Mexicans.
