Reynoldsville Won A Disputed Game

Touchdown Made Near Close Of Contest Was Fair and Must Count.

The DuBois High School football team was defeated in a game with the Reynoldsville team at this place Wednesday afternoon, but the visiting team and the DuBois papers claim it was a tie game. The score was 5 to 0.

Charles Robertson, the referee, says: "The final dispute arose over the touchdown. Bohren was called on an end run. He succeeded in getting past every man (on the DuBois team) but Dunsmore, who was fully ten yards from goal. Dunsmore made an attempt to tackle, but missed, and Bohren kept going towards the goal at full speed. Before reaching the goal line and within two yards of the goal, he slipped to one knee, and fell over the line for a touchdown. The Courier states that Dunsmore tackled him, but he was fully ten yards away when Bohren crossed the line."

The Courier says: "It really should have been a shame for a bunch of men to enter the game with the intentions expressed before hand of 'knocking the heads off of them kids.' The Courier would leave the impression that the Reynoldsville team was composed of men of mature years. Two of the Reynoldsville players in Wednesday's game have passed the twenty-one year milestone, but the other players are not yet of age and it will be several years before some of them can vote. Several of them are high school boys. It was not the old Indian football team that defeated the DuBois team here on 17th inst. The real truth of the matter is the visitors were outclassed, and the team and DuBois newspapers should be willing to own up that the team was fairly defeated."

B. R. & P. Dam Near Punxs'y Completed

The Biggest Pond in Central Pennsylvania Is Named Noonan's Lake.

The Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburgh Railroad Company has completed the big dam on Jackson Run, near Cloe, some three miles east of Punxsutawney, and the big force of men and teams that have made the site a beehive of activity the past three months, have about all been transferred to other points along the line.

The big enclosure, which has been dubbed, unofficially, Noonan's Lake, when filled with aqua pura, will be the largest artificial pond in Central Pennsylvania, and other dams in this section cannot approach it in size.

The official figures of its dimensions are not available, but roughly estimated, the pond is about 800 feet wide, 3,000 feet long and extreme depth, 30 feet.

Local statisticians, who have been figuring on the capacity say that it will, when full, hold about 200,000,000 gallons, or approximately, 6,000,000 barrels of water.

True as Preaching.
If the news-gatherer of the Express should meet 50 persons each day and should put the inquiry: "Any news?" 49 out of the 50 would reply after vigorous scratching of the head: "No-o I guess not," when at the same time he might know of a number of interesting happenings that would help to make the paper just what everyone wishes it to be; a paper full of news of the community. So if the item of news which you expect to see in print is not there, it is your own fault—you failed to inform us of the fact.—DuBois Express.

BATTLEFIELD OF NEW ORLEANS

Described by Duncan M. Dunsmore, Jr., Formerly of Reynoldsville.

About four miles down the Mississippi from the center of New Orleans is the battlefield of New Orleans, the scene of the greatest American victory over the British, on land, in the war of 1812.

Its location is now known as Port Chalmette, a very small village inhabited chiefly by poor whites and negroes. The battlefield borders on the river and stretches back about half a mile from its banks. The entire plot was formerly owned by a rich Creole named Chalmette, and for whom the present town is named. The gateway to the grounds is at the foot of the levee, and the visitor first sees an old time plantation mansion, surrounded by a well kept lawn, and flanked by ancient muzzie loading guns set with their breeches in concrete and their muzzles gazing towards the heavens. There is a book in which the visitors can register on the porch of the mansion.

The mansion is brick, with a porch entirely around it. It is in fine condition, considering that it is a century old, but that is probably due to the fact that the care taker of the battlefield lives in it.

After passing the mansion, the next object of interest is the cemetery, in which are buried all the men of the Union forces, both whites and blacks, killed during the Civil war along the Mississippi below the Red river. This cemetery is well laid out and in good condition. It lays immediately behind the American earthworks.

They are there to-day just as Andrew Jackson threw them up nearly a century ago, except that a small part was levelled to make room for a wall around the cemetery. About a hundred yards beyond the earthworks, and with level land intervening, is a long row of trees. These trees mark the British lines, where they fell in ranks before charging the Americans, and where General Pakenham was shot. Just on the other side of the trees several thousand British soldiers are buried. There was an attempt made to have the British government buy this land and properly mark these graves, but the Britons refused to do so.

Half a mile up the river is a large square monument probably fifty or sixty feet high, with a pointed summit, and constructed of white marble. This marks the location of General Jackson's headquarters. The house which was there grew so dilapidated that it was razed and this handsome monument erected on the spot.

There is another house, or rather the

EXECUTOR'S NOTICE.

Estate of J. D. Woodring, Late of West Reynoldsville Borough, Deceased.
Notice is hereby given that letters testamentary on the estate of J. D. Woodring, late of West Reynoldsville borough, county of Jefferson and state of Pennsylvania, deceased, have been granted to the undersigned. All persons indebted to said estate are requested to make payment, and those having claims or demands against the same will make them known without delay.

ruins of a house, three-fourths of a mile below the battlefield, where General Pakenham was taken when he was wounded, and under its roof he died. His body was sent to England in a cask of rum. The ruins of the building still remain and there is an oak tree growing up through the center of them.

The writer met an old gentleman living nearby who furnished some interesting information. He stated that the British, when landing on the shores of Lake Borgue, an arm of Lake Ponchartrain, could not get their boats near enough to solid ground to land the troops, so they dug a canal. It still remains and is called "Pakenham's Canal."

Chalmette, the plantation owner, turned his plantation over to General Jackson to do as he pleased with it, in erecting defenses on it. Jackson seized a very large quantity of cotton bales and barrels of sugar and used them for breastworks on his line of defense. The late owners of the cotton and sugar came down and demanded its return. Jackson asked them if they could identify their property. They replied that they could, and as fast as each one picked out his cotton and sugar, Jackson handed him a rifle and said, "Here, defend it."

The American soldiers admired Pakenham and said he was a brave man, but their admiration did not interfere with their putting him where he would never command another army.

During the fight a British soldier leaping over the American ramparts and seizing a rifle started firing at his late comrades, and fought like a demon during the remainder of the battle. His name was McKinney and it later developed that he had been forced into the British army against his will and chose this way of leaving it. He married an aunt of the above mentioned old gentleman, and settled down in New Orleans. The informant said that "Uncle Saddle" was a drummer boy in the battle, and it was from him the most of this information was obtained.

When the river is high, and probably all the time, the bodies of the Union dead must be under water, as all the dead, now, are buried in concrete vaults above ground. The reason for this is that water is reached but a few feet below the surface of the ground. The Jews, however, bury their dead in the ground regardless of these conditions.

If "Old Hickory" were there to-day he would see the largest sugar refinery in the world a stone's throw from his old headquarters, and a negro cabin, with little black pickaninies running around it, in the center of the field that was once covered with dead and dying. Those little negro babies at least would not wish for a return of the "good old days."

Correction on Price.

In our issue of October 20 we published an advertisement for The Youth's Companion in which it was stated that the price of the Companion was $1.65 per year. This was a typographical error. It should have been $1.75 per year, as the price of The Youth's Companion is invariably $1.75.

Thanksgiving Spirit Reigns To-Morrow

Reynoldsville, In Common With the Country, Has Much To be Thankful For.

To-morrow is Thanksgiving Day and we certainly have much to be thankful for. The President of the United States and the Governor of our own state have issued proclamations appointing Thursday, November 25, "As a day of general thanksgiving and calling upon the people on that day, laying aside their usual vocations, to repair to their churches and unite in appropriate services of praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God."

How many will thus observe the day? Out of a population of five thousand people in Reynoldsville not over two hundred will attend the union thanksgiving service in the Baptist church to-morrow.

As a nation and as individuals, we have many things to be thankful for. We have religious liberty; we have political freedom; our poorer classes live better, dress better and have more pleasures than the poor of other nations; we are not ravaged by war, but peace makes possible industry and plenty. We have a broad land rich in natural resources that generation after generation will discover new riches and develop new industries of which today we do not even dream. If we have, or if we think we have, but little to be thankful for as individuals, it would still be wise to cultivate a spirit of thankfulness for its own sake. The only absolutely forlorn and irredeemable creature on God's earth is the thankless man. He is the chronic
