

Surcharge Cases Settled.

The cases upon the current calendar of the Common Pleas Court, in which the County of Jefferson was the plaintiff and the Board of County Commissioners the defendants, growing out of surcharges made by the board of auditors at their sitting the first of the year, were settled yesterday. The auditors withdrew from their position on surcharges amounting to $142.30; the surcharge of $7.00 on order overpaid N. D. Corey, Esq., was permitted to stand, Mr. Corey returning this amount to the commissioners; the surcharge of $54.75, supplies for County Superintendent's office, will be disposed of through a mandamus case brought in the argument court by the County Superintendent to compel the Commissioners to furnish stationery, etc.; and the matter of fees paid County Surveyor Gaurley, amounting to $28.50, will probably also be adjusted in the same court. Under all the facts it looks as though there had been a heap more smoke than fire in the controversy between the auditors and commissioners. —Brookville Republican.

Institute Number Out.

The Institute number of The School Herald has been mailed to all teachers and directors; any director or teacher failing to get his or her copy should notify the county superintendent, and the same will be sent promptly. The new R. D. routes make it difficult to keep track of the proper addresses, and probably some of these papers have not been delivered. The Institute number contains all the institute news and a complete directory of teachers and directors. As long as they last copies may be had free of charge by calling at the Superintendent's office, or writing him for same.

The Death of Col. Ellsworth.

A famous tragedy of the Civil War narrated in verse.

The following war ballad was written from memory by W. T. Cox, of Reynoldsville, a few days ago, who heard it sung forty-five years ago by William H. Dean, a member of the 18th Regiment, U. S. Infantry, upon his return from the front after being discharged. So far as it is known it has never before appeared in print and will be of exceptional interest to all old veterans. Colonel Ellsworth, the hero of the ballad, was in Chicago when the rebellion broke out, went to New York and recruited a regiment of picked men which later became known as the "Fire Zouaves" and was the pride of New York City and state during the war. Dressed in a unique red uniform the regiment always presented a spectacular appearance and had a record for bravery equally remarkable. They were ordered to Alexandria, Va., when they fought the city in the hands of the rebels and where Colonel Ellsworth met a tragic death in the manner related in the ballad.

In Eighteen Sixty-one on the twenty-first of May
The weather was surpassing mild and lovely was the day,
In a place called Alexandria a rebel flag did wave;
It was there that Colonel Ellsworth came to his untimely grave.

From the city of Chicago in the state of Illinois
He went to New York harbor, took eleven hundred boys;
Eleven hundred firemen each and both tall and strong;
He picked them out of thousands that desired to go along.

They left their homes and firesides, each took a parting hand;
They started for the capital, young Ellsworth in command;
They were sent to Alexandria, in old Virginia shore,
With Michigan's First regiment the company they bore.

They marched into the city, expecting there some strife;
They took three hundred cavalry without the loss of life.
They took and held their city, their steamboats and their cars,
They tore away the rebel flag and displayed the Stripes and Stars.

A rebel flag on the Marshall House was floating in the air,
Young Ellsworth went to take it down and place our ensign there;
He had unfurled our glorious flag and gave it to the breeze—
And was returning to the street with a soldier's grace and ease.

He wrapped the flag around him and started for the street,
He little thought this unclean rag would prove his winding sheet.
But so it happened. On the stairs, young Brownell just ahead,
A ball fired from a rebel gun killed Colonel Ellsworth dead.

His murderer's name was Jackson, the keeper of an inn;
A traitor of the deepest dye, his heart as black as sin;
He has paid the debt of nature, Uncle Sam he never could trust,
His body bored with union lead lies mouldering in the dust.

Young Brownell shot the traitor, who fell lifeless on the flag;
It is good for you, Young Brownell, you shall never be forgot;
And as for you, Young Ellsworth, you have done your duty well,
Your name in nation's history forevermore shall dwell
