VANISHING RESOURCES.
 Upper Vein of Coal is Being Rapidly Mined and the Town Must Prepare For It.
 The Soldier Run mining property of the Jefferson and Clearfield Coal & Iron Company, located at Soldier, east of Reynoldsville, which a few years ago was believed to be the largest bituminous mine in the world, is destined to be worked out within the next five years. For several years over 1,500,000 tons of coal were taken out each year. Already the company has torn down a number of the houses at the mine to be removed to new workings at Jacksonville, Indiana county. In its most prosperous day Soldier Run, destined to be deserted, claimed a population of 3,000.
 Here is an item that has been clipped by almost every paper in this section of the state. It contains nothing that was not known to local people long ago, but the sudden publicity given the fact makes comment timely.
 The Soldier mine was the largest of its kind in the world and the rapidity of its exhaustion may warn us of how short a time the smaller mines, opened later, will last. The STAR does not want to play the role of an alarmist, is not pessimistic, is not disquieted over the situation, but it does want to present a fair and undisguised statement of conditions that must govern the future growth of the town. We must deal with conditions as they are and not as they ought to be.
 Reynoldsville must fight for its existence.
 With the single exception of the clay and mineral deposits the natural resources which built the town are gone or disappearing rapidly. Recognition of the impending danger ten years ago resulted in the noblest efforts ever made by a Pennsylvania town to maintain and stimulate its prosperity. The result of the work is seen in the half dozen large industries that crown the hill south of town. The glory of the achievement was clouded by the disaster resulting from the brutal, and criminal, recalculation of outside promoters, causing financial loss to scores of local people and disheartening them for further work. It has been a frequent declaration of local people that hereafter the town must depend for its growth on the development of its "resources" without special local assistance. We could name a few towns that have pursued the policy of letting things develop naturally and most of them are about as important as the hole in a doughnut. Reynoldsville's remaining "resources" are not so valuable as to cause any extraordinary scramble to develop them for several centuries to come. If we want to grow in our own generation it is essential that continuous, vigilant tenacious and persistently aggressive efforts be made to enlist capital.
 The folly of the past was the dependence placed on promoters, and the giving to them of sums large enough to establish a business and furnish it with working capital. That will never be repeated while the sanity taught by experience lasts. But it would be greater folly to refuse to lend any aid whatever to legitimate business enterprises that may be interested in the town. The competition to secure reliable manufacturing enterprises is too strong to give hope of gaining anything without some manifestation of local interest.
 Perhaps the most valuable work the local Association is doing is the close scrutiny given to every proposition that comes up and its refusal to endorse or present to the people any that is not backed by a legitimate company soundly financed. Further, it will be stipulated by the Association hereafter that any land or buildings given to companies shall revert to the property of the people, returning to them if the operating company shall ever for any cause abandon active work in the plant. Knowing the safeguards thus established, we believe the people will back up the Association in the work it is aggressively carrying on to stimulate industrial growth along safe and sane lines.
