At least one play is announced for early presentation in this city, which will not come heralded as "One of New York's Big Successes," the management being content to permit the public to which an appeal for support is made to sit in judgment on the production and to decide for itself the exact need of praise or blame to be measured out to it. Neil Twomey's dramatization of Augusta J. Evans' famous novel of the south, "St. Elmo," is thus announced, and in offering it to southern audiences an appeal is made to those who must inevitably be its most severe judges in the sense that the play will have to possess unusual merit in order to win commendation. It will of necessity be judged by a public keen to detect any false note in word or situation, for the dramatist has set himself the task of translating to the stage the work of an author whose life was spent in the south, whose sympathies were southern and whose entire being was so saturated with the life of the country south of Mason and Dixon's line that inevitably her work breathed of the southland with that naturalness which rings true and made its strong appeal which resulted in lasting fame. On behalf of the management it may be said that special scenery has been built for the production and a metropolitan cast has been selected for its interpretation and they seem to be making an honest effort to insure a finished performance. The result will be viewed with curiosity in this and other cities, for critical taste, as more than one producing manager has occasion to know to his sorrow, is as highly developed in the south as in the more important cities of the north. "St. Elmo" will be seen at the Adelphi Theater on Tuesday, September 20. Prices 25 to 75 cents.
