An auto accident that will probably prove fatal happened at Sabula about five o'clock Sunday evening. As Dr. Leonard Barshad, of DuBois, and a party of young people were returning in their auto after an afternoon run, they met, near the Sabula school house, five young girls walking along the road. Four of the girls stepped across the road to the right, but Anna Uren went to the opposite side. Just as she was out of danger, she noticed that her companions had gone to the other side of the road and she attempted to recross the road to them. She was knocked down and several bones were broken, and her skull was crushed. She was hurried to DuBois where an operation was performed, but with slight hope of saving her life.

The Fighting Parson.
When the great-grandfather of the Duke of Norfolk was engaged in any of his electioneering contests he was always attended by his chaplain, an athletic man, one who had made such good use of his hands on several occasions that he acquired the name of "the fighting parson." Mr. Dauncey, an eminent counsel, having once to examine him as a witness during a trial, asked whether he was not the gentleman called "the fighting parson." "I believe I am, sir," the divine replied. "but if you require any more positive proof and will do me the favor to step out of court I will give it to you under my own hand." No further evidence was taken.—Baily's Magazine.

Rather Crowded.
He made the acquaintance of the young woman at the house of a friend and was severely smitten. "May I call on you?" he found the courage to ask her. The girl looked troubled. "I—I'm afraid not," she replied. Then she noticed his look of deep disappointment and hastily added: "We live in a flat, you see, and mamma and sister always sit in the parlor, and papa and the boys play checkers in the dining room, and the kitchen is so awfully small and hot. Would—would you mind sitting on the fire escape?" Of course he hurriedly told her he wouldn't mind it at all, and the course of true love ran smooth again.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Lucky Thirteen.
The number 13, so universally decreed as unlucky, is considered a lucky number by the pupils of the French military school of Saint-Cyr. At the final examination the man who ranks as the thirteenth is believed to have a brilliant career before him. Marshal MacMahon, who entered Saint-Cyr in 1825, as well as Bourbaki, who attended the school nine years later, were graduated thirteenth in their classes. General Lavancoupet, who distinguished himself in the defense of Metz during the Franco-German war, also ranked thirteenth.

He Saw Doubles.
Mr. Lushleigh came up the stairway with his shoes in his hand and his hat hanging precariously upon one ear, singing "We Won't Go Home Till Morning" with wondrous disregard for pronunciation and melody. Mrs. Lushleigh met him with a cold stare and exclaimed:

"Well, to see you in such a condition; William Henry Lushleigh, I am beside myself with indignation!"

"Thash ri!" agreed Mr. Lushleigh, moodily watching the bureau as it walked about him, "thash ri—you're beside y'sheif. I c'n see you right zere beside y'sheif. Glad you tol' me. Was beginnin' to think I sh a bigamist."—Baltimore American.

A Jowett Story.
In spite of the reputation for latitudinarianism he gained from his early trial for heresy, the late Professor Jowett of Oxford was intolerant of pretentiousness and shallow conceit. One self-satisfied undergraduate met the master one day. "Master," he said, "I have searched everywhere in all philosophies, ancient and modern, and nowhere do I find the evidence of a God." "Mr. —," replied the master after a shorter pause than usual, "if you don't find a God by 5 o'clock this afternoon you must leave this college."

The Jarndyce Case.
The Jarndyce case in "Bleak House" was based on fact. It was actually the famous Dyce-Sombre case. A French adventurer in the eighteenth century married a begum of Oude and acquired enormous wealth. I think it was he who built the Martimere at Agra, so famous in the Indian mutiny, and miles of other beautiful buildings of mud and chunam. How his affairs after death got into chancery I don't know, but the fact remains that every scrap of his wealth dissolved in the litigation. While it lasted members of the contesting families were cared for, and descendants are today holding commissions in the English army and other reputable positions.—New York Sun.

Good at Learning.
Mrs. Post—Do you think you'll smoke when you're older, Johnnie? They say it makes one awfully sick at first. Johnnie (aged ten)—I don't expect any bother over it, mother. It wasn't the slightest effort for me to learn to swear.—New York Life.
