Correspondence of the Advocate.

LETTERS TO MEDICUS. NUMBER EIGHT.

My dear Sir:—There were several things in your two first letters which I had intended to notice, but did not feel at liberty, lest our readers should think our discourse as long as that of Job and his friends. But my seventh letter was included in haste, and I was half inclined to write another to remove a little obscurity—which, I see by your third letter, has occasioned some misapprehension on your part. Excuse me therefore, in this endeavor to explain, and correct also some misunderstanding on one or two other points.

And, first, I had no more desire than you to engage in a polemic discussion. My only purpose was to have a friendly correspondence, for the sake of eliciting truth. And however much I may have been actuated by the desire to appear in print, you must allow that after "N. W. Pa." had lectured me for bigotry, because he supposed I would censure the Irishman for praying to Mary instead of God, it was perfectly proper for me to make the inquiry whether the saints could hear our requests. I did not know what evidence would be offered in support of that belief; but was willing—as I am now—to believe that they can hear, provided there is sufficient evidence of it. When you advanced what you considered evidence, it was my duty to examine it with perfect candor, to see whether it was sufficient. This I endeavored to do; leaving the arguments from the fathers, however till I should have opportunity to consult their writings,—hoping you would be able to assist me in this respect. It was no fault of mine if the scripture argument you presented seemed, on a careful examination of the texts, entirely insufficient for your purpose; nor if your philosophical argument seemed positively and (very strongly) to make against you. I asked for evidence "scriptural or other," and am willing to take any other evidence for what it is worth. If God has spoken to any man since the Bible was written, as he did to the prophets, then the testimony of such a man would have the same weight as that of Moses or Paul, only we must be sure that he does indeed speak God's word, and not his own. And you will agree that no mere human testimony can compare in value with "the witness of God."

You say I have "seen fit to deny" your arguments. Not so; I have said that they seem to me inconclusive, and have specified wherein. It was not the doctrine but its foundation that I called "shadowy," I called the proof "shadowy" because it is so difficult to get hold of.

You disclaim personal responsibility for your interpretation of scripture; as it was not yours but that of your church. Pardon me, if I did you injustice—it was unintentional. I supposed you were giving your own interpretation, just as I gave you mine. When I was a child I took the interpretation given me by parents, teachers and pastors; but when I became a man—as competent as they to judge of truth and error—I considered it my duty to inquire for myself. In the main my own judgment has been convinced of the truth of those things I was taught in childhood, but in some points I have been led to think differently. Might it not be so with you, if you would examine the doctrine you received by tradition from your fathers? and might you not come to the same conclusion that I have in regard to the doctrine under consideration, viz: that it grew up after the Bible was written, and rests entirely on human authority?

But you do not think it right to exercise your own judgment in the interpretation of scripture! yet we read that "every one of us must give account of himself to God;" and "if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." Are you willing to follow blindly a teacher who blindly followed his teacher, and go back through a succession of (in this sense, at least) blind guides, trusting that the first of the series had the truth, and that none of the rest have changed it into a lie? If there should be an error, how will you answer it to the Judge that you believed what you were taught, though you had in your hands the word of God by which you might "prove all things," and correct the errors of your teachers? You consider the Bible "far too holy to be twisted and turned and made to suit every whim which the human mind may conceive." Amun to that; and precisely for this reason every man should search the scriptures for himself—not to wrest them from their true meaning, but to enquire reverently what the true meaning is, to learn, not what Dr A., or Dr B., may say, but what God says; and while no man may lord it over our consciences, we are bound to believe and do what God says, at the peril of our souls.

What if God's people for thousands of years had not the printed Bible? They are responsible for their opportunities; we are for ours. "They that sin without law shall be judged without law; and they that sin with the law in their hands will be punished if they neglect to read and obey it." Whatever you may think of my interpretation, you must remember that the burden of proof rests with you and not me. I have not undertaken to prove anything; but merely to examine the proofs you offer in behalf of a (to me) novel doctrine.

I did not mean to "sneer" at the writings of the fathers and the tombstones of martyrs; but merely to intimate that those writings were not divinely inspired, and that the "tombstones of martyrs" were not erected by the martyrs themselves. The Jews "built the sepulchres" of the prophets whom their fathers had slain. Possibly the evidence of these inscriptions is not worthy of the confidence which you repose in it.

I do not see that I misrepresented you at all, in regard to the "position held by the Blessed Virgin Mary" and her supported powers of intercession. I gave your idea, somewhat badly, thus: "Mary stands at so great favor at the court of Heaven that whatever she asks will be granted; and since 'to her does not belong the attribute of justice, but of mercy and compassion' the sinner by asking her to intercede for him will stand a better chance of obtaining forgiveness." My sixth and seventh letters were devoted to this matter—which I was not sorry to have you bring in—and not to the point of my original inquiry; so there is no disagreement between our quotations from my letters, one having reference to the invocation of saints provided they can hear us, and the other to the invocation of Mary on the ground that we should thus be more likely to obtain mercy.

Divine mercy does indeed condemn us all; for we are all sinners by nature and by practice. But "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." To make known these glad tidings to his perishing fellow men is the business of your sincere friend.

EVANGELIST.

MAN MURDERED AND ROASTED BY NEGROES.—The Vicksburg Herald of the 2d says: Mr. Purvis Spens was brutally murdered at his residence in this county on Sunday night by a band of negroes. He was shot twice with a shotgun, his place ransacked and the building burned. His body was burned to a cinder. One of the assassins walked six miles to another place, and reported the murder and burning, but stated it had been done by a gang of white men. Several of the neighbors visited the place, questioned the negroes, and their statements being so contradictory, examination was made, and many of the articles taken from the house were found in the negro quarters. Two of them were arrested, but the others made their escape. Those arrested were brought to this city yesterday, and lodged in jail.

An ingenious article of Geneva, in the "mountains of Switzerland, has recently written his name high on the roll of mechanician. He did so by constructing a jewel called the "Magie Bird." It is not larger than a common tobacco box. By touching a spring the golden lid flies open, a tiny little bird darts out, sings a beautiful song and flies back again into its golden nest. This wonderful jewel, which a man can carry in his vest-pocket costs the neat little sum of $1000. Only two of them have ever been made.

REPARTEE.—"A notorious toper used to mourn about not having a regular pair of eyes,—one being black and the other light hazel, 'it's lucky for you," replied his friend, "for if your eyes had been another pair your nose would have set them on fire long ago."

COMING TO A HEAD.—"I have been troubled with weak eyes for more than ten years," said Dr. B., "and am not able to tell the cause." "Can't you?" said Miss P. I can. "What is it?" "Because they are set in a weak place," said Miss P.

A Scotch Earl, Lord Fife, gave Madame Vestris a thousand guineas to allow a seat to be taken of her leg; the Earl died, and this cherished leg was sold for half a crown.

The editor of the Denver (Colorado) News states that a bid of twelve or fourteen years came into that place from skating, having his skates slung over his shoulders and he barefoot. Nobody need doubt about that boy succeeding in sliding through this world.

A good natured colored woman says the Danville Register, was boasting the other day to her former proprietor of the progress which her son, a dark, bright urchin of ten, was making at school. She said he was in "do mortification table."

—A gentleman having asked how many dog days there were in a year, replied for an answer, that it was impossible to number them, as every dog had his day.

THE IMPEACHMENT.

The commercial and business centres of the country are beginning to feel the effects of the continued agitation on the question of impeachment. Trade is drooping, manufacturers are fearful of the future, ships are lying at the wharves wanting cargo, and laborers are seen in the streets without work.—

There is an abundance of capital, but a lack of confidence. Men fear Congress. They look upon that body as the solid men, the true friends of France did upon the Revolutionary Directory of that nation, as capable of doing any rash and suicidal deed. The New York Tribune in noticing the movement of Mr. Aylesbury looking to an impeachment of the President, says: "It is a necessity shall be found to exist for impeaching and ejecting from office a President of the United States, we are aware every considerate American will regard it as a deplorable necessity, one to be avoided if possible, and as long as possible. No patriot will wantonly or lightly shake the twin fabrics of public order and public credit." This is a sensible view of the case, and it is strengthened by the sensible remarks of Mr. Dodge, of New York, in the National House of Representatives, who, in the course of a speech in opposition to the impeachment programme, "deprecates it as being unfortunate in a political point of view, but vastly more unfortunate in paralyzing the industrial interests of the country. He mentioned the instance of a charitable institution of New York which had voted to invest its surplus capital in United States securities, but that vote had been reconsidered on account of the impeachment proposition, and the president of the society was directed to deposit the amount in the New York Life and Mutual fund. So it was in all branches of business."

These are plain, practical views of this impeachment issue which the Radical leaders are determined to force upon the country. The deposition of a President of the United States, by a Congress and Senate representing only a portion of the States, at a time when men's passions are at fever heat, is no trifling matter. The election of a successor by the votes of only twenty-six States is also calculated to add fuel to the issue of popular discontent. The masses will not be satisfied with an arrangement which puts the majority at the mercy of the minority, and their discontent may be expressed in such a manner as to alarm the timid and make thoughtful the resolute. The whole country will feel this violence done to the very foundation of the government, and trade and business, public confidence and national credit, will suffer to a degree little dreamed of at the present time.

An impeachment of the President under such circumstances as those attending the movement against Andrew Johnson, will "shake the twin fabrics of public order and public credit;" foreign countries will look with distrust upon a nation which thus allows unprincipled and scheming politicians to squander its rich inheritance of liberty, order and constitutional law; and foreign creditors will begin to call in the moneys they have invested in United States securities. The possibility of impeachment, opening up questions of a more inflammable character, of dividing the North and destroying its business prospects, will have an effect on the bankers and money kings of Europe. They are keen observers of the state of political feeling in this country, and know from home experience what a sudden and ruinous fall there is in the securities of a nation where the laws rest upon the changing aspect of partisan feeling, and not upon a sound basis of constitutional authority. The deposition of the President upon mere political grounds will be viewed in all European nations as a revolution, and treated as such in all business transactions.

If, therefore, the more preparatory movement looking toward the impeachment of the President has been "unfortunate in paralyzing the industrial and business interests of the country," as stated by Mr. Dodge, what may not be expected when the full fury of the storm consequent upon carrying out that scheme shall burst upon the nation? Not only will the business of the nation be deranged by home causes, but the return of securities from abroad will add to the general convulsion. The question, therefore, is, will business men permit a few politicians like Sumner, and Stevens, and Boutwell, and Ashley, to bring on such a commercial, financial and business revolution as will attend the deposition of the President for daring to differ with a minority Congress, and uphold the Constitution and all laws of the land? The price to be paid for sustaining such a movement is well ascertained. It is undermining, if not totally destroying, the "twin fabrics of public order and public credit," and in this light the business men, capitalists, and laborers of the nation must look at it in order to measure and understand the responsibility resting upon them at this time.—Aye.
