The Ghost's Summons.

BY ADA BUISSON.

"Wanted, sir—a patient." It was in the early days of my professional career, when patients were scarce and fees scarce; and though I was in the act of sitting down to my chop, and had promised myself a glass of steaming punch afterward, I hurried instantly into my surgery.

I entered briskly; but no sooner did I catch sight of the figure standing leaning against the counter than I started back with a strange feeling of horror which for the life of me I could not comprehend.

Never shall I forget the ghastliness of that face—the white horror stamped upon every feature—the agony which seemed to sink the very eyes beneath the contracted brows; it was awful to me to behold, accustomed as I was to scenes of terror.

"You seek advice," I began with some hesitation.

"No; I am not ill."

"You require then—"

"Hush!" he interrupted, approaching more nearly, and dropping his already low murmur to a low whisper. "I believe you are not rich. Would you be willing to earn a thousand pounds?"

A thousand pounds! His words seemed to burn my very ears.

"I should be thankful, if I could do so honestly," I replied with dignity. "What is the service required of me?"

A peculiar look of intense horror passed over the white face before me; but the blue black lips answered firmly, "To attend a death bed."

"A thousand pounds to attend a death bed! Where am I to go, then?—whose is it?"

"Mine."

The voice in which this was said sounded so hollow and distant that involuntarily I shrank back. "You're! What nonsense! You are not a dying man. You are pale, but you appear perfectly healthy. You—"

"Hush!" he interrupted; "I know all this. You cannot be more convinced of my physical health than I am myself; yet I know that before the clock tolls the first hour after midnight I shall be a dead man."

"But—"

He shuddered slightly; but stretching out his hand commandingly, motioned me to be silent. "I am but too well informed of what I affirm," he said quietly; "I have received a mysterious summons from the dead. No mortal aid can avail me. I am as doomed as the wretch on whom the judge has passed sentence. I do not come either to seek your advice or to argue the matter with you, but simply to buy your services. I offer you a thousand pounds to pass the night in my chamber, and witness the scene which takes place. The sum may appear to you extravagant. But I have no further need to count the cost of any gratification; and the spectacle you will have to witness is no common sight of horror."

The words, strange as they were, were spoken calmly enough; but as the last sentence dropped slowly from the livid lips, an expression of such wild horror again passed over the stranger's face, that in spite of the immense fee, I hesitated to answer.

"You fear to trust to the promise of a dead man! See here, and be convinced," he exclaimed eagerly; and the next instant, on the counter between us lay a parchment document; and following the indication of that white muscular hand, I read the words, "And to Mr. Frederick Read of 13 High Street, Alton, I bequeath the sum of one thousand pounds for certain services rendered me."

"I have had that will drawn up within the last twenty-four hours, and I signed it an hour ago, in the presence of competent witnesses. I am prepared to see you. Now, do you accept my offer, or not?"

My answer was to walk across the room and take down my hat, and then lock the door of the surgery communicating with the house.

It was dark, icy-cold night, and somehow the courage and determination which the sight of my own name in connection with a thousand pounds had given me, flagged considerably as I found myself hurried along through the silent darkness by a man whose death bed I was about to attend.

He was grimly silent; but as his hand touched mine, in spite of the frost, it felt like a burning coal.

On we went—tramp, tramp, through the snow—on, on, till even I grew weary, ry, and at length on my appalled ear struck the chimes of a church clock; while close at hand I distinguished the snowy hillocks of a churchyard.

Heavens! was this awful scene of which I was to be the witness to take place veritably among the dead?

"Eleven," groined the doomed man. "Gracious God! but two hours more, and that ghastly messenger will bring the summons. Come, come; for mercy's sake, let us hasten."

There was but a short road separating us now from a wall which surrounded a large mansion, and along this we hastened until we reached a small door.

Passing through this, in a few minutes we were stealthily ascending the private staircase to a splendidly furnished apartment, which left no doubt of the wealth of its owner.

All was intensely silent, however, through the house; and about this room in particular there was a stillness that, as I gazed around, struck me as almost ghastly.

My companion glanced at the clock on the mantelshelf, and sank into a large chair by the side of the fire with a shudder. "Only an hour and a half longer," he muttered. "Great heaven! I thought I had more fortitude. This horror unmans me!" Then, in a fiercer tone, and clutching my arm he added, "Ha! you mock me, you think me mad; but wait till you see—wait till you see!"

I put my hand on his wrist; for there was now a fever in his sunken eyes which checked the superstitious chill which had been gathering over me, and that my patient was but the victim of some fearful hallucination.

"Mock you?" I answered soothingly. "Far from it; I sympathize intensely with you, and would do much to aid you. You require sleep. Lie down, and leave me to watch."

He groined, but rose, and began throwing off his clothes; and watching my opportunity, I slipped a sleeping-powder, which I had managed to put in my pocket before leaving the surgery, into the tumbler of claret that stood beside him.

The more I saw, the more I felt convinced that it was the nervous system of my patient which required my attention; and it was with sincere satisfaction I saw him drink the wine, and then stretch himself on the luxurious bed.

"Ha," thought I, as the clock struck twelve, and instead of a groan the deep breathing of the sleeper sounded thro' the room; "you won't receive any summons to-night, and I may make myself comfortable."

Noislessly, therefore, I replenished the fire, poured myself out a large glass of wine, and drawing the curtain so that the firelight would not disturb the sleeper, I put myself in a position to follow his example.

How long I slept I know not, but suddenly I awoke with a start and as ghostly a thrill of horror as I ever remember to have felt in my life.

Something—what, I knew not—seemed near, something nameless, but unutterably nameless, but unutterably awful. I gazed round.

The fire emitted a faint blue glow, just sufficient to enable me to see that the room was exactly the same as when I fell asleep, but that the long hand of the clock wanted but five minutes of the mysterious hour which was to be the death-moment of the "summoned" man?

Was there anything in it, then? any truth in the strange story he had told?

The silence was intense.

I could not even hear a breath from the bed; and I was about to rise and approach, when again that awful horror seized me, and at the same moment my eye fell upon the mirror opposite the door, and I saw—

Great heaven! that awful shape—that ghastly mockery of what had been humanity—was it really a messenger from the buried, quiet dead.

It stood there in visible death clothes; but the awful face was ghastly with corruption, and the sunken eyes gleamed forth a green glassy glare which seemed a veritable blast from the infernal fires below.

To move or utter a sound in that hideous presence was impossible; and like a statue I sat and saw that horrid shape move slowly toward the bed.

What was the awful scene enacted there, I know not. I heard nothing, except a low stifled agonized groan; and I saw the shadow of the ghastly messenger bending over the bed.

Whether it was some dreadful but wordless sentence its breathless lips conveyed as it stood there, I know not; but for an instant the shadow of a claw-like hand, from which the third finger was missing, appeared extended over the doomed man's head; and then as the clock struck one clear silvery stroke, it fell, and a wild shriek rang through the room—a death-shriek.

I am not given to fainting, but I certainly confess that the next ten minutes of my existence, was a cold blank; and even when I did manage to stagger to my feet, I gazed round, vainly endeavoring to understand the chilly horror which still possessed me.

Thank God, the room was rid of that awful presence—I saw that; so, gulping down some wine, I lighted a wax taper and staggered toward the bed. Ah, how I prayed that, after all, I might have been dreaming, and that my own excited imagination had but conjured up some hideous memory of the dissecting room.

But one glance was sufficient to answer that.

No, the summons had indeed been given and answered.

I flashed the light over the dead face, swollen, convulsed still with the death agony; but suddenly I shrank back.

Even as I gazed, the expression of the face seemed to change; the blackness faded into a deathly whiteness; the convulsed features relaxed, and, even as if the victim of that dread apparition still lived, a sad solemn smile stole over the pale lips.

I was intensely horrified, but still I retained sufficient self-consciousness to be struck professionally by such a phenomenon.

Surely there was something more than supernatural agency in all this?

Again I scrutinized the dead face, and even the throat and chest; but, with the exception of a tiny pimple on one temple, beneath a cluster of hair, not a mark appeared. To look at the corpse, one would have believed that this man had indeed died by the visitation of God, peacefully while sleeping.

How long I stood there I know not, but time enough to gather my scattered senses and to reflect that, all things considered, my own position would be very unpleasant if I was found thus unexpectedly in the room of the mysteriously dead man.

So, as noiselessly as I could, I made my way out of the house. No one met me on the private staircase; the little door opening into the road was easily unfastened; and thankful indeed was I to feel again the fresh wintry air as I hurried along that road by the churchyard.

There was a magnificent funeral soon in that church; and it was said that the young widow of the buried man was inconsolable; and then rumors got abroad of a horrible apparition which had been seen on the night of the death; and it was whispered the young widow was terrified, and insisted upon leaving her splendid mansion.

I was too mystified with the whole affair to risk my reputation by saying what I knew, and I should have allowed my share in it to remain buried forever in oblivion, had I not suddenly heard that the widow, objecting to many of the legacies in the last will of her husband intended to dispute it on the score of insanity, and then there gradually arose the rumor of his belief in having received a mysterious summons.

On this I went to the lawyer, and sent a message to the lady, that as the best person who had attended her husband, I undertook to prove his sanity; and I besought her to grant me an interview, in which I would relate as strange and horrible a story as ear had ever heard.

The same evening I received an invitation to go to the mansion.

I was ushered immediately into a splendid room, and there, standing before the fire, was the most dazzlingly beautiful young creature I had ever seen.

She was very small, but exquisitely made. Had it not been for the dignity of her carriage, I should have believed her a mere child.

With a stately bow she advanced, but did not speak.

"I come on a strange and painful errand," I began, and then I started, for I happened to glance full into her eyes, and from them down to the small right hand grasping the chair. The wedding ring was on that hand.

"I conclude you are the Mr. Beal who requested permission to tell me some absurd ghost story, and whom my late husband mentions here." And as she spoke she stretched out her left hand toward something—but what I knew not, for my eyes were fixed on that hand.

Horror! White and delicate it might be, but it was shaped like a claw, and the third finger was missing!

One sentence was enough after that.

"Madam, all I can tell you is, that the ghost who summoned your husband was marked by a singular deformity. The third finger of the left hand was missing," I said sternly, and the next instant I had left that beautiful, sinful presence.

That will was never disputed. The next morning, too, I received a check for a thousand pounds; and the next news I heard of the widow was, that she had herself seen that awful apparition, and had deserted the mansion.

The Biggest Game of Poker Ever Known.

The newspapers have a story of Commodore Vanderbilt seeing a blackleg's bluff at poker and going a thirty thousand dollar steamer better, but this is hardly up to an affair of which we recollect reading long since in a Mississippi paper.

In the days when the Hon. George Poindexter represented the State in the Federal Senate, say some thirty five years ago, before the time of railroads, he started from Natchez by an up river boat on his way to Washington. The Agricultural Bank, having a heavy deposit to make in one of the Pittsburgh banks, entrusted the money to his charge.

Before twenty four hours had elapsed some of the sporting fraternity were making up a little game, and invited the Senator to take a hand, to which, nothing loathe, he consented. The game ran about the usual course of such things, while the professionals were taking the measure of their intended victim, and guessing the size of his pile.—When those points were settled to their satisfaction, the business began in earnest.

An overpowering hand was dealt to Mr. Poindexter, upon which he made a small bet, the others passed, with one exception, was "saw Lim" and went a thousand dollars better. To this he responded with another thousand dollars better, when the gambler replied, "I see your thousand dollars and go thirty thousand dollars better," for perceiving that his customer was pretty flush, he did not dare risk a few thousands.

Poindexter replied that that was more money than he had, but he would put up his pile which entitled him to a sign. This the other denied to be the law.—"Certainly," said Mr. P., "I always understand that a gentleman has a right to a show for his money."

"Not unless it is stipulated before," said the gambler, and the gambler appealed to the "gentlemen" present, who sustained him.

"Come," said the ruffian, throwing down a well-filled pocket book, and laying his watch on the table, "I go thirty thousand dollars better, and give you five minutes to raise the money."

Poindexter bid him count his money, and there it was, sure enough, in good bills. "Well," said he rising, "I will see if I can find any friends who will furnish the funds," and he passed into the ladies' cabin, in which was his state room. He lingered sometimes, and as the hand was nearing the last minute, returned quietly, took his seat, drew a bulky pocket book from his breast, and laying it upon the table, calmly said:

"Sir, I see your thirty thousand dollars and a hundred and twenty thousand dollars better, and give you five minutes to raise the money."

It was the turn of the astonished gambler to call a count, but, before Mr. Poindexter got through with the hundred and fifty thousand, he threw down his hand—there being too many spectators to make it safe to raise a row—and, with his companions, went ashore at the next wood yard.

PROSPECTUS.

1868. "THE AGE." 1868.

A DEMOCRATIC DAILY AND WEEKLY JOURNAL IN PHILADELPHIA.

The attention of the Democratic and Conservative citizens of the country is called to this Daily and Weekly issue of this widely circulated journal. The dissemination of sound political doctrines should command the earnest attention of every true friend of the Union and the Constitution. The events of the past political year are full of significance. The uprising of the people in opposition to the destructive policy of Radicalism, clearly shows that the masses are determined to restore again to power the great Democratic party, every page of whose history is filled with the glory and prosperity of our common country. No more efficient method for presenting the Truth can be devised, than in circulating Democratic journals. It is the intention of the Proprietors of THE AGE to make it, in every way, worthy of the support and confidence that have heretofore been extended to it. Improvements are contemplated in every department, and no pains or expense will be spared to keep it in the front rank of American journalism.

The DAILY AGE contains the latest intelligence from all parts of the world, with articles on Government, Politics, Trade, Finance, and all the current questions of the day; Local Intelligence, Market Reports, Prices Current, Stock Quotations, Marine and Commercial Intelligence, Reports of Public Gatherings, Foreign and Domestic Correspondence, Legal Reports, Book Notices, Theatrical Criticisms, Reviews of Literature, Art and Music, Agricultural Matters, and discussions of whatever subjects are of general interest and importance. Besides Special Telegrams, it has all the dispatches of the Associated Press from every part of the United States, and also the Associated Press dispatches received by the Atlantic Cable; and the news from all parts of Europe brought by the steamers, is instantly telegraphed from whatever point the steamers first touch.

THE WEEKLY AGE will be a complete compilation of the news of the week, and, besides the leading editorials from the Daily, will contain a large amount of interesting matter prepared expressly for the weekly issue. It will be in all respects a first class family journal, particularly adapted to the Politician, the Farmer, the Mechanic, the Merchant, the Family Circle, and the General Reader, having, in fact, every characteristic of a live newspaper. At an early day will begin an intensely interesting serial, by one of the most popular and fascinating authors, and it is also the intention to publish, from week to week in the course of the year, three or four of the best and latest novels.

TERMS OF THE DAILY.—One copy, one year, $9.00; six months, $4.50; three months, $2.00; for any less period, at the rate of $1 per month. Payment required invariably in advance. Postage on the Daily, thirty cents per quarter, or one dollar and twenty cents per annum, to be prepaid at the office of delivery.

TERMS OF THE WEEKLY.—One copy, one year, $2; five copies, one year, $9; ten copies, one year, $17.50; twenty copies, one year, $35. To clubs, where the papers are sent to one address, the following reduction will be made: Five copies, one year, $8.50; Ten copies, one year, $13.50; Twenty copies, one year, $20. A copy will be furnished gratis for each club of ten, or more, to one address, for one year. Payment required invariably in advance. Postage on the Weekly, five cents per quarter, or twenty cents per annum, to be prepaid at the office of delivery.

The above terms will be rigidly adhered to. Drafts on Philadelphia, or Post-office Orders, payable to the order of the Publisher, being safer, are preferable to any other mode of remittance. All who send money by Express, must pre-pay Express charges. Specimen copies of the Daily and Weekly sent gratis, on application at this office. Advertisement inserted at moderate rates.
