

SAVED BY A MIRACLE.

THE WONDERFUL RESCUE AT SEA OF HANS HANSEN.

Full Overboard in a Terrible Tempest. Ship Manoeuvred to Keep Him In Its Lee—Shipmate Saves Him at Risk of His Own Life—Thrilling Story of Our Coast.

To be snatched from the jaws of the angry deep after a quarter of an hour in the terrible embrace of almost certain death, 450 miles at sea, with friends near at hand, but helpless to save, was the thrilling experience of Hans Hansen, a seaman of the steamship Belgian King, from Antwerp, bound for Boston. Poor Hans is a reformed man today, it is safe to say, for his remarkable rescue was little short of a miracle, and the exertions of the brave men of the sea would be robbed of all their charms if his escape should be considered as anything but the work of a mystic spell.

The Belgian King, Captain Weiss, sailed from Antwerp Oct. 31. She encountered a series of westerly gales, blowing with hurricane violence. This tempestuous weather prevailed until the 18th, when it seemed as if the angry ocean had concentrated its entire force upon one continuous attack upon the noble ship and her precious cargo of human souls.

It was on Friday, that mucky day, the 18th of the month. The moon was at its full, a silent spectator of the struggle of man with the terror of all terrors, death.

The good ship rode to, and for 13 hours (an ill promising number to those superstitious souls) tossed and rolled on the mighty waves helplessly, beyond the control of man and within the power of the angry sea; her stern high up or in the air, almost perpendicular, for one moment, and her stern in that perilous position the next. They were 450 miles off Cape Race.

Steadily and at intervals, as the ship floundered about, parts of her rigging gave way and disappeared within the jaws of the sea until it seemed certain that she was literally going to pieces. It was useless to think of launching a boat, for no boat could have stood that sea. The head gear had long since gone over to the depths of the sea with a rattling billow, and the sturdy boatswain, with three picked men of his brave crew, was on the forecastle cutting away the entangled wreckage that remained, while Chief Mate William Harrison was on the bridge, high above, directing his men. Suddenly his eagle eye spotted a monstrous wave towering fifty feet above the deck's level, and he rushed on them at a fearful pace, with unlimited force. The engines, which were slowly moving at the time to keep the ship as steady as possible, were instantly stopped. As the powerful wave struck the ship she reeled and tossed, and when it seemed that she must founder, she made a mighty effort and weathered the attack. But when the waters rolled over her, taking with them everything on the deck that could not withstand this last, terrible attack, the ever watchful mate perceived that while the boatswain and his men were brave fellows who were safe upon the deck, clinging with a deathlike grasp to a ringbolt, after being rolled and tossed about the deck, one man was missing.

It seemed like hours before the sea cleared the ship, and no sooner had the great wave receded than the mate perceived that a man was missing. He was dead then alive, gave the alarm, "Man overboard!" Instantly Chief Mate Harrison threw a life buoy to the struggling man, far out in the bosom of the surging waves. It was but an instant before it was known that over the ship that genial Hans Hansen was within the grasp of the merciless waves.

Poor Hans! He could not reach the first life buoy. It was far beyond his grasp, and he was utterly powerless to go to it in this angry, surging mass of billows.

Mate Harrison grasped the rail of the bridge firmly, and as the great ship tossed and rolled slowly worked his way to another buoy, and this time, with the care and accuracy of a professional ball player, he threw it far, far out to the gurgling, struggling man. So successful was he and so accurate was his aim that the buoy almost fell over the head of the drowning man. Such an expression, such a look of gratitude as swept over that pained, bleached face!

Captain Weiss came on deck at the time, and as he saw the brave efforts of the man against almost certain death he ordered that all power be exhausted before he be consigned to a watery grave.

The winds howled and the waves dashed the poor helpless man about, and the ship as well, for fully a quarter of an hour. But there was hope yet for the almost discouraged and disconsolate Hans, for was not day approaching? The efforts of the drowning man grew perceptibly weaker and weaker, and each moment seemed and almost promised to be his last. He was obliged to keep constantly paddling with his hands and feet to keep above the waters, and he was now exhausted from the exposure and his tireless efforts, while the great quantities of salt water that he was forced to swallow almost finished him.

He went over the lee side of the ship or he would instantly have been engulfed and lost. He floated or rather was wafted aft of amidships, and the engines were put slowly astern to keep the floating spark of humanity under the lee of the vessel, in order to protect him from the fury of the elements as much as possible.

At the expiration of fully 15 minutes, if not longer, Mate Harrison succeeded in throwing a line out to Hansen, who grasped it as firmly as his weakened fingers could, and with it he was able, and barely able, to keep his drooping head above the waters. Slowly he was pulled alongside the ship, when one of his brave companions before the mast went down a line at the peril of his own life to save his shipmate from a watery grave.

As he decoupled the waves beat upon him, and one moment he was far out over the furious sea with nothing but the line to cling to, while the next he was ruthlessly hurled with terrific force against the iron side of the ship, which was itself being tossed about like a chip upon the waters. It seemed almost as if all attempts to save Hansen must be abandoned, for with such force was he hurled that he seemed certain to crush his bones or at least render him insensible. But this man, truly the bravest of the brave, knew no fear and the life of his friend was in jeopardy. He still persisted in his noble efforts, for sometimes it is necessary to sacrifice a life to save a life.

Once within reach of his shipmate, this brave sailor, whose name was withheld by his shipmates and himself, grasped the drowning man and put a rapping bowline around him and then climbed back to the deck of the tempest tossed ship and assisted in hauling the completely exhausted form of Hans Hansen on board.

JACOB RAN THE SHIP.

A BABOON MADE THINGS LIVELY ON THE HERMES.

Cheered the Helmsman's Forearm and All the Tobacco In Sight—His Antics With the Cook's Stores—An Anchor Chain Settled Him.

On Aug. 19, just before Captain Larsen of the Swedish bark Hermes sailed from East London, South Africa, with a cargo of wool, he bought a 4-foot baboon from a ship chandler. The baboon—which has the expansive upper lip, wrinkles, big ears and minding motions of the mouth peculiar to his race—was captured by the ship chandler on a hunting expedition to the forests of the interior.

The hunter, while exploring the neighborhood, heard chattering overhead, and spied a young baboon skipping through the tree tops, grinning and carrying in his mouth a piece of hide. The animal was followed by a colony of these hideous beasts, which were sitting among the branches of tall trees. Rifles crackled, and a father, mother and two of the three offspring tumbled to the ground in their death throes. But the third infant remained for an hour hopping about his dead kindred. He stared pitifully at the dead and weptless bodies of his family, but was finally captured in a net.

The captive was 16 months old when Captain Larsen transferred him to the Hermes. The hunter said he would not get his growth for five years yet, and assured the sailorman that the youngster was surely a cousin of the late Chico, who died at Dayton, O., on July 27, 1894.

The 20 sailors took to the baboon. They christened him Jacob. He had a small house amidships. Jacob would eat any kind of food the crew ate, be it pork or plum duff, and was seen chewing as much tobacco as the ship's carpenter. Jacob would never accept a secondhand quid. If one was offered to him, he would sling it overboard and chatter angrily. He was also an adept at sucking big pipes and did it while perched atop of his house, listening to the sailors' yarns at night.

There is a little monkey on board the bark named Millie. Her quarters are in a barrel lashed not far from Jacob's deckhouse. Jacob attempted to lure Millie into his powerful grasp, but she nimbly, and his chain was not long enough. Then he began hurling his rations at her.

Jacob kept quiet for a couple of days. He dozed a good deal and was observed to scratch his immense ears thoughtfully. On the third day, while he was apparently asleep, Millie inconspicuously crept near, and Jacob, who had a weather eye open, grabbed her. He would have squeezed her to death had not the sailors rescued her.

While the Hermes was crossing the equator, becalmed between the north and southwest trade winds, Jacob broke his chain. The baboon had acquired a taste for Swedish punch. A sailor passed his house one day and the baboon imagined that the panikin in the man's hands was full of punch. He chased the sailor up the rigging of the foremast, but the jockey of the foreyard caught the chain and Jacob was held a prisoner. Sailor Westergren climbed to the yard and captured the baboon.

Three weeks ago, when the bark was in the northeast trade, Jacob broke his chain again. Axel Larsen, the captain's son, was at the wheel. Jacob determined to have fun. He jumped for the helmsman, but Larsen ducked and Jacob went clear over him. The second time the baboon jumped Larsen grabbed him by the collar. In the struggle Jacob savagely chewed the sailor's right forearm. Second Mate Nystrom and a couple of deckhands assisted in securing the baboon.

About a week later Sandberg, the cook, had occasion at the middle watch to go into the galley, and was saluted in the dark by a mighty crash of crockery, as if the bark's pantry had been struck by a bolt of lightning. A lantern was brought, and there sat Jacob in a corner with the remnants of 18 plates around him. After that Jacob watched the cook for days.

The crew ate off boards for a day or two until new stores could be opened. Jacob was restrained with a piece of anchor chain. That settled him, and the remainder of the voyage was undisturbed by his pranks.—New York World.

For several centuries the purse was always worn fastened to the girdle. A cut purse got his name from the fact that rather than take the time to loose the purse from the belt, where it was secured by buckles, he cut the straps

HER WEDDING GOWNS

A DESCRIPTION OF MISS VANDERBILT'S TROUSSEAU.

The Bridal Dress a Product of Parisian and American Skill—The Lingerie of the Most Delicate Fabrics and Entirely of American Make.

The fact that Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt's bridal gown was ordered in New York instead of in Paris is furnishing an agreeable subject for discussion among people of small minds. Among those New York women who think that nothing altogether correct in the way of gowns can come from anywhere but Paris surprise is expressed that the whole trousseau of the future duchess was not imported from the French capital. There are, however, plenty of women of taste and jingo spirit who share Miss Vanderbilt's opinion that the work of an American dressmaker is good enough for any occasion. As a matter of fact, however, the dress Miss Vanderbilt will be married in is, to all intents and purposes, a Paris creation. It was imported by a fashionable New York dressmaker and was in her shop when Mrs. Vanderbilt and her daughter called to see about the latter's trousseau. All that was necessary to be done was to trim the costume and fashion the bridal train or "tail," as the English call it.

The gown was what dressmakers call a model—that is, a simple bridal gown, it being the only one of the kind imported. When the dress had been selected, Mrs. Vanderbilt furnished the lace with which it was to be trimmed. The lace, the design for which was suggested by Mrs. Vanderbilt, was made in Brussels. The idea carried out in its making is a combination of the designs of the point d'Angleterre and point a la crepe satin. The color of the lace matches it. The skirt of the gown is of a comfortable walking length. The waist is high necked, with very full sleeves, close fitting below the elbow and reaching over the hand in the shape of a kamlet.

The lace with which the gown is trimmed is 12 inches deep. In trimming the skirt this lace was mounted, being arranged in four horizontal bands across the front and sides of the skirt, almost concealing the satin. Over the lace on the right side of the skirt falls a spray of orange blossoms.

The front of the waist is, as the dressmaker says, "billowed out." The bodice is of a soft, clinging fabric, and is fastened to the shoulders by long, thin straps. The train is of the regulation length prescribed for the gowns worn by the women presented at the English court, and the Duchess of Marlborough will wear her bridal gown when presented at the court.

The dressmaker has been commissioned to make only two of the bridesmaids' dresses. All of these will be of plain white satin, with sashes of ciel blue silk. The bridesmaids' hats are of royal or dark blue velvet, with something of a fall to prove a novelty. The average day dress of the present epidemic throughout the empire has been to date over 68 per cent.

It would seem that while Dr. Kitazato has not produced a specific remedy, he has made a discovery which cannot fail to prove of great value to the medical profession. Nobody knows as yet the nature of his treatment, but it is not to be supposed that he will long deny to science the character of his discovery.

As the cholera is now slowly dying out in all sections of Japan, it may not be long before it will be again that the epidemic manner in which the authorities have fought the plague and kept it under entities them to the admiration of the world. They have demonstrated that the way to crush epidemics is to fight earnestly, systematically and persistently.

In Japan every condition for the propagation of disease germs of all kinds exists, and yet, in the city of Tokyo, with its population of more than 1,600,000, the highest number of cases reported in any one day since the cholera made its appearance, last May, was something like 40. It is now down to 20 per day. Recently there was a sudden outbreak in the town of Sendai, in a province to the north of us.—John A. Cockerill in New York Herald.

The Redheaded Girl is Discouraged—Trying to Teach Her Things.

That redheaded girl on Baynes street lately undertook to teach the art of domestic services to a Polish maiden who had been plucked green in the wilderness of Shumway street. The new girl was willing, but ignorant even of the English language. Instruction had to be imparted by object lessons. The first lesson was in lighting the gas. The kitchen treasure was told by her new mistress that she was to turn the stopcock and then apply a match to the end of the pipe. She seemed to comprehend.

The next day the redheaded girl was attracted by a vile smell issuing from the kitchen. On investigation the Polish exile was found standing beside the cold water faucet, patiently lighting matches and holding them under the stream of water, which she had turned on, only to see them immediately extinguished, leaving an odor of charred wood behind.

In the course of a year or two the redheaded girl hopes to be able to impress on the Ruthenian mind the fact that all general principles are subject to modification in practice, and particularly that all iron pipes do not burst into flame when approached by a match.—Buffalo Express.

FATHER TIME NOT IN IT.

The Iron Horse, In Spite of Electricity, Shows Itself a Fast Traveler.

Third Vice President H. Walter Webb of the New York Central railroad has given the world something else to remark upon, besides his racing with the able to talk about his racing with the iron horse. Accompanied by his private secretary, two newspaper correspondents and a few railroad officials, he has made the run from Chicago to New York—within 30 of 1,000 miles—in 17½ hours. From Chicago to Buffalo the speed averaged just upon 65 miles an hour, despite the fact that the road had made a slippery track. But for that Vice President Webb would have made the whole run between Chicago and New York within 17 hours. As it was, 540 miles was within a fraction of 65 hours an hour, beating all previous long distance runs at home and abroad. For the first time a Chicago newspaper was read in New York on the day of its publication.

America is decidedly the fastest nation on earth, and Vice President Webb has made that fact evident, in railroading at least.—New York Evening World.

FOR EATING ONIONS.

Boy Was Whipped, and Now a Big School War Is On.

Miss Foster, a schoolteacher at Peconic, Ill., severely whipped a pupil, the son of Editor Nate Colby of the Peconic News last Friday because the child refused to eat onions. She does not like onions, and had so expressed herself, and last Friday took more vigorous measures to show her disapproval. The children in the school promptly rebelled against the introduction of the rod as punishment for eating onions, and all have eaten raw onions at every school day meal since.

The parents of Peconic have taken up the sacred cause of liberty, even to the liberty of going around enveloped in the odor of onions, and the town of Peconic is shaken to the core over the matter.—Chicago Tribune.
