The cost of hand and machine drill ing is made the subject of some instructive comparisons in The Wormlandska Annaler. It appears that at Danemora. Sweden, mechanical rock drilling costs 50 cents per yard, while hand drilling is only half that amount, so that the single advantage possessed by the for mer would seem to consist in the greater depth to which the holes may be drilled. At the place named the mean depth of holes with hand drilling is 2 feet a inches in stopes and 2 feet in conversed steps or overhand stopes, while with muchine drilling the depths are 5 feet and 3 feet 3 inches, respectively. In the year 1890, with hand drilling, a meter hothole brought down 2.17 tens of rock; in 1892, with machine drilling, four tons, or 3.32 tons if the subdivision of the rock masses by hand drilling be was carried from the house to the grave depth of the hole, therefore, lossened in a stone coffin, which, weighing more tumn of 1807 the imperial court was rarely an option smoler.
