To those who are unfamiliar with potate growing, the high prices which early potatoes command might seem to make it an object to dig a large part of the crop and market it while the price in up. But there are several drawbacks in marketing potatoes early. The weather is bot, and while the skins of potatoes are tender, they will rub off their lackets if handled freely, and the potatoes are then almost sure to rot. Hence they are never sent far or in large quantities. In digging potatoes early there is great waste, as only a few of the largest are of marketable size, and those that will sell would grow still larger if left a few days longer in the hill.
