Men and women have nothing to do to keep straight. A hundred nerves and muscles are at work all through the waking hours, giving the body, on receiving orders that the body, with its many joints and natural instability, shall preserve its equilibrium, shall not stagger or double up in a hopeless heap. These nerves and muscles are a highly organized signal service, the chief offices of which are in the semi-circular canals buried in the "stoney" bone-work that protects the inner ear. Were it not for these canals a human being would find it difficult, often impossible, to maintain a proper balance either while walking or standing still.

So long as these canals are in healthy working order their reports are trust worthy, but when any undue force has shorted them or any agency, such as sickness, has interfered with their workings their messages are inaccurate, and the brain, like the engineer of a battleship in action, when the men above are blinded and bewildered, has nothing to do but let things go. —Barre (Md.) Herald.

MARTIN'S WAY.
Irishmen are inclined to word version, but say a writer in the Tenth Century, the following description of slow speech which often generated in a steamer which occasionally they use the best way possible in explaining a thing:

"It's a queer sort of way Martin talks," said Pat. "It's as if he talk's words out of his mouth an' didn't 'em before he gives 'em to you."

When he possesses half a dozen wives, the Kaffir's mind is over and over again, and he becomes a gentleman. If wives plumb the newly-learned and taught after what cattle their husband and master owns. With a kingly full of daughters the Kaffir must become a rich and important person.

The daughter of a chief costs 21 cows and the daughter of a king no matter how old or ugly. The chief are severely strict in their watchfulness over the morals of the Kaffirs. If one is found guilty of dishonesty, he is fined so many oxen. The Kaffir is said to be better in his original state than when contaminated with white ways like it. Mothers endorse it. C. W.
