—A well known poultry raiser says there will be a shortage of turkeys this fall and winter. The crop of turkeys last year was very short and consequently fewer turkeys were kept over winter than usual. This spring was a particularly hard one on young turkeys, on account of the heavy rains. Young turkeys cannot stand much dampness, therefore the number lost was very great and even fewer will be raised this year. It is also thought that chickens will be scarcer than heretofore, as they have been affected, though in a less degree, by the wet weather.
