Printers Told To Beware About Quoting Prices

Tholesale Paper Dealers Take Their Customers and the Public Into Their Confidence

These be troublous days for printers, for they are obliged to raise their prices or go bankrupt. They complain to the wholesalers of paper, because the customers of the printers first complain to them. But the wholesaler is as helpless as the printer. The situation has become so tense that all wholesale paper dealers have withdrawn their prices, and they caution printers to take but little chance on quoting fixed prices on most of their printed product.

The following letter from one of the big wholesale paper houses is a sample of many, and it is published in the interest of fair trading. Fairminded people who read it will take a reasonable view of the situation and not whine about the increased prices the printer is forced to ask under present conditions of the paper market

In the fall of 1915 the volume of business increased and reached a volume beyond anything before experienced in the paper trade. Under these conditions the shortage of paper making supplies were periously felt, resulting in rapidly advancing prices, both for paper-making materials and finished paper. The condition today in paper-making materials is acute, and in addition many mills have sold their product 3 to 4 months in advance. A number of mile have withdrawn entirely from sore at the trains.
