CHILD TRAINING

THE DWARF AND THE GIANT

By Carolyn Sherwin Bailey.
 (Author of Tell Me Another Story, What to do for Uncle Sam and other writings.)
 Once upon a time there was a family of Giants who lived in the land of Let's Pretend, and they had a young son, who was not afraid of anything. He was so strong that he could play marbles with boulders, and he was so plucky that he did not mind in the least when the other people laughed at him because he had a dwarf for his very best friend.
 No one could understand why the giant-boy loved the dwarf who lived in the woods, for he was rather a grasping disagreeable little fellow. But the giant-boy used to look for the dwarf almost every day, creeping carefully through the woods on his hands and knees, hunting for him.
 When he found the dwarf, the giant boy would set him on the tip of his little finger and run with him over the hills and back again. It was like the steeple-chase for the dwarf. Or the giant-boy would put him on a leaf and blow him way up in the air, catching him safely when he drifted down. It was like a ride in an airship for the dwarf.

When the giant-boy was ten years old, it was time, according to the custom of the country, for him to go out and test his courage and if he came home as brave as he started, his giant father would give him a beautiful wooded mountain to be his inheritance. His giant-mother gave him several bushels of apples and five hundred sandwiches and a barrel of milk to carry with him, and she told him that when these were gone, the giants along the way would be glad to give him food and shelter.

So the giant-boy started out with his heart full of courage, but he had gone only a little way when he met a storm. It was a terrific black storm that came rumbling down from the sky and crashing over the hills. It brought fire and thunderbolts with it and it seemed to shake the whole earth. Going into such a storm was like marching alone into an advancing army, but the giant-boy did it and he was soon safely through the storm, just by facing it.

He met bravely all kinds of things the dark strangers and larger giants and unknown places and new kinds of hard work. He grew older and nearer to being a giant-man before he turned toward home again. When he was almost there, he entered the forest and whom should he see but his old friend, the dwarf, digging beside a stream!

"Here I am! Are you not glad to see me?" the young giant called as he stepped across the stream with one stride.

"Let me alone, I am busy," the dwarf replied. Then, without looking up, he threw a pebble at the giant. It hit his heart and he heard a loud crack.

"Now I have lost my inheritance," he said to himself, "my heart is cracked."

"How did that happen?" his giant-father asked when the boy reached home.

"I met and conquered storms and all kinds of dangers," the giant-boy answered, "but my friend, the dwarf, threw a pebble at me and it cracked my heart."

"So the giant-boy was given a beautiful wooded mountain for his inheritance, an old crack in his heart soon grew together. As for the dwarf, he was always a little lonely dwarf and never grew up to be anything else.
