WORKING UNDER DIFFICULTIES

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

"YOU'LL have to go to bed and be fast on your back for some time," the doctor said to me.

I knew his reputation and that he was no doubt right. There could be no argument. I had a tremendous lot of work that should be done—writing most of it. I had no temperature; I was not really sick, what little brain I have was working in as active and normal a way as it had ever done. It was only that an accident had made it necessary to spread me out and hang weights on my left arm to pull it back into a position which it refused to assume. I write with my right hand; even lying on my back my knee can be flexed and a pad of paper balanced upon it. I would write even if I were on my back!

The process was slow and wearisome. I had to rest at short intervals but it was amazing how much I could get done in a day, stretched though the position was. And the work made the time pass more quickly. I was more cheerful from having something to do, my back ached less because I had less time to give to pondering over my aches. Indeed, as it was, I came to enjoy it, and the work got done.

A friend of mine, because of a peculiar accident was forced for a month to lie face downward on her bed. She could look over the edge of the bed which was low and near the floor, and she devised all sorts of things to occupy her time—some of them useful work, other plays—and was, while doing something worthwhile, kept herself cheerful and happy. It was not an easy condition under which to work, but she was resourceful and energetic.

I have just been told of two men lying in a hospital, neither permitted to move his body, but free to do what he wished with his hands. One was a stock broker who had a long-distance telephone installed and did business regularly during business hours. He admitted that he got on more successfully than when he was in his office in the city because, lying prone in bed, he was not interrupted, not disturbed, he gave his letters to his strong partner early in the morning and then he had all his time to himself.

The second man was a writer. He had a typewriting machine suspended above the bed in such a way as permitting him to move it up and down to adjust the sheet of paper on which he was writing, and in such a position as to make it possible, lying as he was to operate it. WOMAN PREACHER WINS WAY IN WEST

Spokane, Wash.—Across a pastorate that stretches 35 miles through the Colville valley of Washington, Rev. Gertrude L. Apel drives her car throughout the week ministering to the spiritual needs of 150 members of two Methodist Episcopal congregations. Each Sunday she preaches three sermons, one at Valley and two at Chewah.

In this little empire there is only one other resident Protestant minister to assist her in burying the dead, baptizing the babies and marrying the young couples.

During ten years of her ministry Miss Apel has held three pastorates. The first was in Montana and the other two in Washington. All of them were frontier communities. She attends to all the usual duties of a pastor and also takes part in the civic affairs of the community.

To her ability to meet people on a common ground Miss Apel attributes much of the success of her pastoral work. She believes that success of the church's mission is dependent upon making Christianity practical.

"People recognize their need of the church when we make Jesus Christ real to them and help solve the problems of their everyday lives," she declares.

"I do not believe the young people of our times are different from those of other generations. In some cases, it is true, they have come into contact with materialistic theories in their school work and the church has offered them nothing that they felt met the situation. We must approach the people of today, young people as well as their elders, on a ground of common understanding. If we would hold their interest and loyalty."

All have the most primitive habits.

Earth's Crust Settling

Sir Oliver Lodge Says

London.—The earth's crust is settling, declares Sir Oliver Lodge, explaining the abundance of earthquakes, tidal waves, typhoons and hurricanes, rainstorms and floods.

"There is nothing abnormal in the operation," he says, "but improved methods of communication broadcast the news of earthquakes and typhoons all over the world in a few seconds. A century ago typhoons and earthquakes, such as have happened in Japan, Mexico and the Black sea, could have been unheard of for many months."

"The crust of the earth is continually settling down. If a crack appears in the fabric of a house the land does not necessarily collapse at that spot, though another part of the building may fall because of the crack. Similarly a crack in the earth in the Pacific may cause another crack in a different part of the world."

Gold Bootlegger Is Captured

Toronto, Ont.—Bootlegging in gold is the newest crime operated on an extensive scale in the northern Ontario mining camps.

The other day a suspected couple were observed to leave the gold town of Timmins hurriedly in a motor car. They were captured, the car and their belongings searched, but nothing incriminating found. Not the woman's secret, like the secret of the Black Cat in Poe's story, was too ingenious to keep. She said they were carrying "high grade." "But where?" asked the police.

She wore a specially constructed canvas brassiere in which was secreted between $9,000 and $10,000 worth of gold. The husband assumed all responsibility and the woman was not charged.

This capture led to the arrest of an operator who had $29,000 in gold secreted in his premises and is credited with depositing of $128,000 worth in the last few months. He pleaded guilty and was given the option of a $1,500 fine.

Leads to Wide Drive.

The incident with its evidence of wide ramifications in the traffic has led to a drive against suspects on the part of the police. A dozen cases are awaiting trial.

The gold is stolen by employees of the mines. No others have access to them for all the works are surrounded by wired barricades, the only indication of possible romance in this prosaic-looking treasure house.

In some of the richer stopes gold is sometimes blasted out in flakes as large as a pigeon's egg—640 or 850 in a single lump. One thief, in such a stopes, can make away with the native metal at an amazing rate.

The thief requires an accomplice on the outside to get his stuff to market. The accomplice generally assumes the role of a harmless farmer who has ample opportunity to hide the loot. A second accomplice is necessary to carry the hoardings hundreds of miles away where a market for such an unusual merchandise can be found.

This whose criminal business is dit fruit, but its profits are great and detection is difficult.

In many high-grade mining camps the custom is to have all miners strip and go under a shower bath before they change into street clothes and check out of the works. Ontario mines have hesitated to put this practice in force because of the high character of their labor. "Ninety-five per cent of our men are honest," said one manager. "We do not want to search every day if we can catch the dishonest ones any other way."

Thieves Rarely Caught.

But in practice the thieves within the mine are rarely caught. The "high grade" operator outside does not identify the men from whom he buys his nuggets. He probably could not if he wanted to. He knows him as "Mike" and nothing else. Where did he meet him? Probably in a pool-room.

Another difficulty in stamping out the crime is the reluctance of juries to be harsh on the accused. Mining communities find it hard to realize that treasure that is picked up out of the earth is not public property. Moreover, they regard the law against high grading as unnecessarily harsh and "un-British." Hence juries often hesitate to convict even where the evidence is convincing.

When "high grade" is once stolen it is lost forever as far as the real owner is concerned. Even if seized it cannot be identified as belonging to this or that mine. So there is never any restitution. As a consequence all "high grade" seizures are turned over by agreement to the Ontario Mining association, where it is placed in a fund to be used in fighting the traffic.

DOUBLE DUTY for Christmas

BY Calvin C. Tracy

MR. BARBER, deep in thought, seated at a broad desk, heavily laden with papers which bore evidence of her many responsibilities, planned and pondered the question at length. She was of slight build. Her hair was tinged with gray, her complexion clear, her eyes brown and sparkling, her facial expression most pleasant, although one could not help but note at the moment a trace of worry.

There were exactly one hundred and fifty old people in the institution depending upon her care and judgment. Never was this fact brought so forcefully to her attention as it was at Christmas time. To be sure, people were generous and thoughtful in remembering this group. That was exactly it. How could one put this generosity into a form which would benefit the largest number in the group? The agitation of the question had begun but today, when Mrs. Barber had received a note and a donation of fifty dollars from a group of fine, public-spirited citizens who were endowed with the true Christmas spirit. The accompanying note merely stated that its use could best be determined by Mrs. Barber, and so would be left entirely to her good judgment. She read the note once more as it lay on the desk before her.

"Our group or society has a little fund raised in various ways by its members. Each year at Christmas time, we give fifty dollars of this fund to the head of some institution, and leave it to the judgment of the person in charge as to how it will be disposed of to best advantage in their particular or peculiar situation. It has occurred to us that the children are more apt to be well taken care of than are the institutions such as yours. We therefore wish to remember the Old People's home with our small sum. We have enjoyed accumulating this money and hope it, added to your other yearly contributions, may help to bring cheer and happiness to your home on Christmas day."

The evening failed to disclose the adequate solution for this problem. However, on the morning, Mrs. Barber awoke with a radiant face. With the clearness of the morning, the crispness of the air and the invigoration which had come through sound, restful sleep, the perplexities vanished, and Mrs. Barber saw her way clearly defined before her. Her feet and hands couldn't work fast enough to comply with the wishes of her brain. Time was limited. Plans must be drawn up quickly and executed immediately.

The first day saw the telephone as a center of interest. It was constantly in use either for outgoing or incoming calls. If Mrs. Barber had realized how many phone operators she wore out, her kindness would certainly have made her spread her phone calls over two days. She was so enthusiastic and absorbed in her plans that she was not aware of her excessive tax upon these girls. The last phone call brought smiles and added energy to Mrs. Barber as she hurried off into the heart of the great smoky city. She spent perhaps an hour behind closed doors in conference with the matron in charge of the large settlement house. At the end of that time she emerged with a piece of paper bearing the names of some fifteen young boys and girls. Glancing down the list she swallowed forcefully, uttered a peculiar sound and shook her head as she said:

"Can't exactly say I am very apt at pronouncing these long foreign names."

The settlement house matron put her hand on Mrs. Barber's shoulder in an affectionate manner.

"Don't worry. They understand and are used to it. They will help you and you will soon learn their Americanized versions." The next two days were spent in the city library. From the stacks of books which Mrs. Barber went through in her two days there, but one did she select to take away with her.

For some few days after this Mrs. Barber occupied her time with the white paper with the list of unpronounceable names, the book, and last but not least, fifteen vivacious young persons, grimy and a little crude, but how sweet, earnest, happy and eager they were. The training had to be patiently undertaken. The response was altogether what might have been expected from these kind-hearted, high-spirited youngsters.

Then, lastly, there were the house decorations to be attended to. There were willing hands in the home which helped hang wreaths, trim the tree and put up the little sprigs of holly and mistletoe. Melodies not familiar to the younger generation filled the house. The humming and quiet whispering told of expected joys not now far in the offing.

There was shopping to be done and many preparations for the feast which would be necessary. Busy days, but what happy ones. Mrs. Barber was never too busy or too tired to stop and have a friendly chat with anyone of the elder people, to profit from their suggestions or abide by their wishes, if it was at all possible to do so.

Christmas Day, the day arrived. When the old folks came down to their breakfast, they found a Christmas tree laden with at least one gift for each. They were as pleased and happy as children with their presents.

At noon the festivities took on proportion. One would never have guessed that the folks ranged anywhere from seventy to ninety-five, as they trooped in to Christmas dinner. The table was heavily laden with all the Christmas delicacies, especially good for people of their age. They also had another little surprise. They had fifteen radiant happy guests who were introduced to them. It was indeed hard to judge which was enjoying the dinner the most, the young or the old. Suffice it to say, the young folks enjoyed it the most.

Before the group left the table Mrs. Barber made a little announcement. "Our guests have come out today not only to help us enjoy our Christmas dinner, but to help us to have a delightful afternoon. They have come prepared to present a short Christmas play and to furnish us a little musical entertainment."

From the chuckles, smiles, laughter and applause, there was no doubt about the approval with which the entertainment was received. The young people were worth of all the praise which they received. The coaching had been successful. The day had been delightful and was a topic of conversation for a long time. Mrs. Barber was even happier over the occasion than the old folks, if such a thing could be possible. She realized that this vision, her scheme, had been practical. The fifty dollars had given pleasure to not only the old people but it gave these young foreign settlement-house children a chance to share in the joys of Christmas, the joy of giving of their own talents, reaping the consequential rewards of pleasure, praise and remuneration, the joy of finding the true Christmas spirit in giving freely of themselves, as well as having had a sumptuous Christmas dinner which otherwise might have been merely a thing of their dreams.

There Were Willing Hands Which Helped Trim the Tree.
