CHILD TRAINING

KEEP TRYING.
By Harriet H. Heller.

"When first the child begins to imitate, do not the little effort under-rate. Do thou the same, it will the more delight him.

And ever to renewed attempts invite him."

The way lay through a cherry part of the city, down a long hill. Grass plots and flower beds bordered the path and sometimes little children played among them.

The sunlight flashed an arrow of gold down the incline, and I could see a child alone, sitting upon the pavement. Apparently he was most intent. His hands were busy and his sunny head bent close over his undertaking.

As soon as I approached he seemed to realize my presence, though he was too busy to look up until I was quite close to him. He was very small, brown-eyed and very winsome.

His hand grasped a piece of crayon, and as his eyes critically surveyed his drawing on the walk, he said, including me now within his glance:

"I've made another kind of an 'S'."

"So you have," I replied, but the questioning look in his eyes made me inquire.

"What troubles you?"

"It's-it's another kind," he replied uneasily. Before him was a well-drawn letter "S" about a foot high, executed with the swinging stroke of a strong and skillful arm; beside it his own imitation of the first half of the letter. He saw the difficult curve to the left, but he could not make it.

"Shall I finish it?" I asked.

With a sigh of relief he yielded the crayon.

"Who made this one for you?"

"A man," he answered. Evidently he was acquiring his instruction as the opportunity permitted.

"There!" he cried with satisfaction when I made the required stroke. "There it is!"

"How old are you?" I ventured, for he looked too little to be concerned with difficult curves.

"Most three, I think," he said.

Later I learned from his proud little mother that he knew "nearly all of his letters," and that he had learned the letter "S" soon after he was two years old.

An unusual child? Yes, but with greater possibilities some graver responsibilities.

Parents sometimes fail to realize that the young child needs widely varied activity and constant direction to awaken and broaden his interest, rather than the over-stimulation which induces him to "go far" with some one kind of play.

The ordinary interests of a three-year-old boy lead him to convert the dining room chairs into horses, or the sofa into a automobile. He first takes an interest in things that move, then in things that make a noise. By imitating in his play the life about him, a child unconsciously develops some understanding of it, then when one phase of activity ceases to interest him, he turns to another to "play" that while his interest lasts.

The young child is tremendously alert, vital, experimenting at life first-hand; LIVING. For most of them experience must be the great educational factor. Froebel appreciated this fact and chose the wind mill with its attractive motion as a symbol of the child's experimental interest.

The wise parent always awards excitement with even the "most unusual" three-year-old, but has care for his normal development, since that is the most urgent need for little folks.

Encourage the experiments of children, but never force them; let them keep trying.

BACK AGAIN.
By Alfred N. Phillips, Jr.

Well, now I've quit the uniform. I'm with the folks again. I've met the girl I've seen the town, with praise up the stairs I did, there's not a thing I've missed and yet—say Bud, oh hang it all, I'd like to re-enlist!

I've got a job, an' settled, but I'm restless just the same. For after chasin' Heines there I must admit it's tame. An' out of doors, that gals you know—These times—the Bolshevist—the country flag—Oh, hang it all. Say bud, I'll re-enlist.
