CHILD AND ALIEN LABOR IN BEETS

American Farm Worker Not Protected by Sugar Tariff.

LOW WAGES ARE BEING PAID

"Wages Not Wanted" Say Field Managers in Colorado and Michigan.

By H. E. MILES

Chairman of the Fair Tariff League. The American farmer, and the American worker are always the chief objects of legislation, put forward by the high tariff politicians, when an upward revision of the tariff is in order. That has always been true and is now true in Congress in connection with efforts to enact the high rates in the pending so-called Permanent Sugar Bill.

The farmer as well as the worker, however, has come to realize that any benefit he may derive from an exhibition tariff, levied in the name of protection on an article which he produces, is more than offset by the tribute which he must pay on a similar article which he consumes but does not raise.

Sugar is a good example of how this works out with reference to the farmer. The American beet sugar industry prospered under a protective tariff of one cent a pound on Cuban raw sugar. The Emergency Tariff Act increased this 50 per cent. One of the arguments advanced for this tremendous increase was that the beet sugar industry needed this protection in order to protect the American farm laborer engaged in raising sugar beets.

Unfortunately for this argument there is very little American farm labor in the beet sugar industry as the records of the Department of Labor and the Department of Agriculture show.

Sugar beets are raised and harvested almost entirely by the cheapest grade obtainable of foreign labor, contracted for by the sugar manufacturers and turned over to the beet growers. Field bosses in the beet sugar sections have indeed frequently told investigators that American labor is not wanted because "a Yankee can't stand the hard work."

Child Labor in Majority

Not only is the larger part of the beet sugar labor this low priced foreign labor which we are warned against but even a larger part are the children of these foreign families. In Colorado alone, one of the most important beet sugar states, the National Child Labor Committee found 5,000 children between ages of six and fifteen years actually engaged in the cultivation of sugar beets. From the time the beets are in the ground until they are delivered at the factory the hardest kind of manual labor is required. And much of this is done by small children. These children spend long hard hours on their hands and knees weeding and thinning the beets. Then when the beets are fully grown they spend more long hard hours cutting the heavy roots with their knees and with a wide array of dangerous cutting knives of the type.

The Federal Children's Bureau made an intensive study of the Colorado situation. Of 1,977 included in this study seven tenths were the children of contract laborers. Over one fourth of them were under ten years old, a small percentage under eight, less than one-fifth were as much as fourteen years old. Considerably over a half ranged from nine to thirteen. From 60 to 80 per cent, according to the process in which the child was engaged, worked nine hours or more a day. From one-fourth to one-third worked varying with the process, averaged seven hours or more a day. The average working day for all processes was usually between nine and ten hours.

Evil Effect on Children

Postural deformities and malpositions were found in 50 per cent of the children examined by the Bureau's physicians. Another serious effect is the interference with their education. Among 800 children from nine to sixteen years of age for whom school records were obtained over 40 per cent were from one to seven years below the normal grade for their age.

The general study of the National Child Labor Committee in Colorado and Michigan indicates that these conditions hold generally throughout the beet raising sections. A farmer who owns or leases land contracts with the sugar company to furnish a certain number of acres on which beets are to be grown. The company agrees to furnish the hand labor, or agrees to furnish the contract with a laborer, usually a Russian, or a Mexican, to do the work on a definite number of acres.

The number of acres a laborer contracts to care for is based largely on the number of children he has. The labor employed in the Colorado beets is composed of the nationalities of the workers are more diversified and there are fewer Russians and Mexicans and no Japanese. They are made up largely of Hungarians, Slovaks, Poles and Czechs. In Michigan, as in Colorado, the beet people are exploiting the foreign laborer and his children.

All the workers are completely penniless and are dependent on a high tariff for their support. The tariff American
