COMPENSATION WILL RUN HIGH

Awards to Reach Total of $500,000; Early Payment Promised
 Referee Snyder at Spangler

Compensation awards from the state of Pennsylvania to the women and children left without support of husbands and fathers by the explosion Monday morning in the Bailey mine will reach a total of $500,000. It was conservatively estimated by men familiar with the making of the awards and the number of people left destitute.

It is reported reliably that the insurance carried by the company was through the state compensation bureau, though reports have been circulated that different private companies carried the insurance.

Referee Jacob Snyder, who Monday afternoon set up headquarters here, said that he was not certain who carried the insurance. Mr. Snyder, would not hazard a guess as to the amount that will be paid out.

James Mark, vice president of district No. 2, United Mine Workers of America, arrived here Tuesday afternoon in company with Powers Haggard, union organizer. All of the men who lost their lives in the disaster Monday were members of the union. They had been on strike until a short time ago, after the signing of the Cleveland pact last August, when terms were made with the company officials.

Mr. Mark estimated that the union would pay out at least $20,000 to the destitute families. In case of death union insurance, he said, paid $200 to the family.

Payment of the compensation depends upon the number of children orphaned by the death. A widow with two or more children receives $12 a week until her children are capable of supporting her, or for at least 200 weeks. Many widows are left with eight and ten children dependent upon them. They will be paid compensation in proportion to the number dependent upon them. Some families, it is estimated, will receive as high as $10,000 over a period of 10 years.

The longest telephone cable in the world, which connects Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. This is where it crosses the Allegheny Mountains, west of Bedford, Pa. The cable weighs over four thousand tons and holds as many wires as could be strung on eight heavy pole lines.

Two more years of service! Stationer Frederick, of Reading, Pa., has grown up with the telephone, having just completed his fortieth year in the business.
