Washington well knew what the backwoodsmen could do, and when preparing for the seige of Boston probably remembered how the remnant of Braddock's 1,300 men had been saved at Fort Duquesne. For, about the first thing he did after taking command at Cambridge was to dispatch a hurry call into the West for riflemen | Courlers and messengers were sent into the Berkshires, the Cumberlands and the Alleghanies talling for every hunter. trailer, scopt and ploneer to come to New England and get the honors that awaited them. They did come-1,300 come in response to Washington's call for 810 sharpsbooters.

On the way east, these backwoods men gave exhibitions, according to orders, that recruiting for the Coloniai army might be encouraged. At Boston, Washington had his 14,000 to 16,-000 men, many of whose guns were of a bore so smooth and so huge that they were little better than blunderbusses, drawn up in two lines that they might witness the wonderful shooting of the frontier riflemen.
