Have You This Habit?

TACTLESSNESS

THE very day of Mrs. Jones' dinner party, Percy and Percy Lord heard of Edward Jones' divorce from his wife. "Linner is to come off just the same," said Percy, "but for heaven's sake, Mr. Lord, don't bring up the subject of Edward!" A few hours later the Lords arrived at the Jones home. "Good evening," said Percy to her hostess, "how is Edward?" "It was always like that, she always said just what she had meant to say. Outside she carried it off smiling, but inside she was 'full of dead men's bones'." At last they went in to the table, and Percy drew a deep breath and tried her attention. "Gently on the things she must not mention politics or religion in a general gathering. Then, 'How shall you vote?' she heard herself asking her dinner partner, and remembered too late Percy's saying that that was the unforgivable direct question to a man. "My husband is a Republican," she hastened to add as her neighbor declared himself a Democrat. So it went from bad to worse. The climax came when, growing more and more tactless, she took up her knife and fork and with fried chicken and before she knew it, sent her table-bomb sailing down the table square at the guests' two seats beyond her. "Catch it on the wing," cried that lady receiving the table-bomb, and Percy, when she saw the bird instead of looking embarrassed, wondered why she could not turn an awkward situation into a joke. As they left the Jones' home, Percy said to her sister, "I don't know how you can be so tactless. I'd send her to a sanitarium." Percy, as was his custom, asked sad and said nothing. But that very remark set Percy thinking, and she went to see the great Dr. Williams, who was a family friend. After he had heard her out and asked several leading questions, Dr. Williams said: "I've been troubled with the idea of what you don't do. Loosen up—stop trying to avoid imagined social dangers—think of what people like instead of what they don't like." HAVE YOU THIS HABIT? (Copyright © The Metropolitan News-Sunday Service.)

THE DAYS RIGHT AFTER

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WHEN they had come away from her and left her in her house alone. When there was nothing more to do but cut his name upon the stone, I thought how cruel kindness is how selfish all our sympathy. When they had come away from her and left her all alone to be alone. When he was there, and in the house however pale, however faint, when still his earthly form she had, then it was good of us to come. But, oh, the days right after! then I think they need us even more. Than when the shades shut out the sun and when the crepe is on the door. Let's never get our kindness done, let's never let our comfort end. As long as sorrow needs our love, as long as trouble needs a friend. Let us remember, in the time of loss and loneliness and care. The days right after always are the hardest days of all to bear. (© by MetLife Newspaper Syndicate.)

Your Last Name

IS IT HACKETT?

HACKETT is found in England as well as in this country and its an English surname. It is undoubtedly a corruption of Haccourt, a French name. Thus the first to be called Hackett in England may have been a resident of Harcourt, France. But the founder of the Hackett family here was not of English or French origin. He was native of Holland and came to this country over a hundred and twenty-five years ago. He married a daughter of Rev. Abraham Kestler, a New York clergyman. Their son was James Henry Hackett, born in New York in 1830. After graduating from Columbia college he married Katherine Stutz, an actress, and for several years led a successful career as a merchant. Financial reverse came, however, and at his wife's suggestion he went on the stage. Both he and Mrs. Hackett acted successfully for many years. Their son was James Kestler Hackett, born in 1900, whose middle name was that of his paternal grandmother. Burton—One very good authority says that this is a form of Bouton, meaning boot. Others say that the surname Burton is derived through mispronunciation from Burton of Burton, a name in England. Bowles—This name, it is agreed, is derived from Bowles, a place in Normandy. One of the early members of the family wrote his name Hugh de Bowles. Champness—This name, which has the variation Champneys, found in this country and England, is derived from Champagne and indicated one who came from that section of France. The Appleton Family

Mrs. Lyander John Appleton
Miss Deyvere Mervin Appleton
Master Chauncey Deyvere Appleton

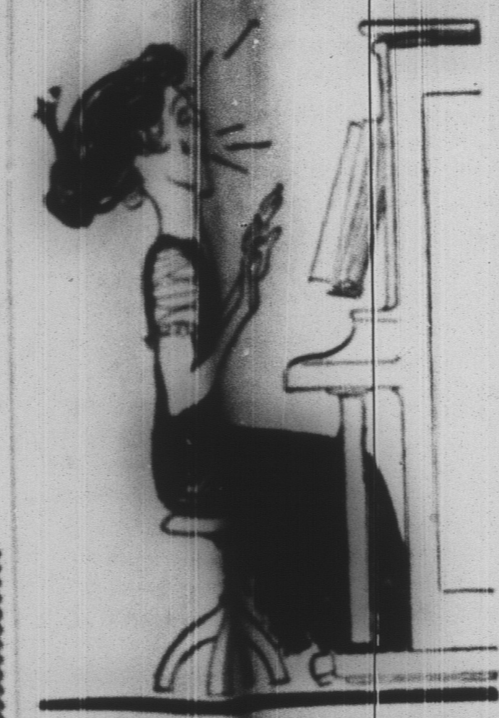

MRS. LYANDER JOHN APPLETON discovers many things that make the physician "I'm too far to stretching the carpet," she says, "I reached up too high in cleaning a pantry shelf, and something in me snapped, and I haven't been well since." Something is always snapping like this, according to Mrs. Appleton, leaving the impression that her mother are always snapping like firecrackers.

Lyander John Appleton once believed that if he thought enough rocks, he wouldn't have to give up his when company came, but though he filled the house, he still hasn't enough. He abandoned that ambition and is now trying to get as many beds in the house that he will not have to sleep on the parlor lounge when company comes. This ambition is the only one Lyander John Appleton has left.

Mrs. Lyander John Appleton talks a great deal to callers about her ailments. It is related that the preacher called one to ask about her husband's soul, and all he could find out from Mrs. Appleton was the condition of her liver.

It has never dawned upon his mother and sister that the reason Chauncey Deyvere Appleton always pulls out the chair that has a weak leg, and breaks it down before company, is that he isn't allowed in the parlor often enough to become acquainted with its short-comings and infirmities.

The grasshopper pest became so serious in parts of Arkansas at one time that negro laborers with whippers were hired to whip out the grasshoppers in the cotton fields. H. K.
