Kitten's Interesting Trip

A locomotive engineer, who was inspecting his engine before a run, noticed a kitten clinging to the pipe beneath the boiler. He left it there for the moment and then forgot about it. Before he thought of it again the kitten had made two round trips between Jersey City and Crawford, N. J. At Crawford he removed it, and some one took it to the station house. The kitten must have had an interesting story to tell its mother and will probably have a much more interesting one to tell its grandchildren—Youth's Companion.

An Easter Carol

All hail this joyous Easter morn,
When earth arises newly born.
The daffodil has left the mold
To grace the world with suns of gold,
The peacock spreads his slender plumes,
And to the earth sky ascends,
And every bush and tree and cloud
Offers an offering to God.

Hail this glorious Easter day,
When angels rolled the stone away,
And from the dark and lowly door
The Lord arose, arrayed in glory,
His garments streaked with light,
And in His hands for these and me
The gift of immortality.

Man's Greatest Victory

Life eternal is doing God's work, knowing Him, and being submissive to His will. What was true of the Good Friday sacrifice is true in lesser degrees of all sacrifice. Yet men shrink from it—which is natural—but they shrink from it as always as evil, and this is wholly unnatural if human nature is what it ought to be and is capable of becoming.

The greatest victory man can win is vice over self and sin.

Burden of the Cross

In their thoughts of the resurrection of Jesus Christ men have devoted their attention so largely to the empty tomb that they have to some extent failed to take into account the power that was in that life over which death had no more dominion. The death of Christ, and of all else, is a mere episode in a great process, is in truth a part of life itself. It is through dying that men truly live. Righteousness is eternal and everlasting.

Birthplace of Religion

A view of the holy city from the road linking Jerusalem and Jaffa. The ancient walls of the city are seen as are also the domes of the Church of the Sepulcher. The tower of the German Church of the Savior is also visible. In the foreground is one of the ancient trees which has cast its shadow over the holy places for centuries.

The Sepulcher and the Holy City

THESE are found in all the galleries. Several of these are by Titian, who was the most important painter of the Renaissance period, and one of the greatest painters of all times. The famous known as the "Bewailing or Lamentations Over Christ" is the most noted of these. It hung in the Aragon in Venice, but when the city was bombarded by the Austrian airships, this treasure was taken from its frame and removed to Rome for safekeeping.

The picture is rich in reds, this somber color predominating. It has several figures, but the ones of the dead Christ and the Virgin are the main features. Here the Christ is in a recumbent position, being supported by the Virgin. His face is peaceful with just a glimmer of light from the halo falling over it. The figure is particularly well drawn. The Virgin is seated in dark blue with a brown headband.

Titian was born at Cadiz in 1488. Family belonged to the nobility and early in life he had many educational advantages. He executed commissions for several European princes and his work became famous throughout Europe. His coloring was remarkable, a splendid golden tone and somber brown suffusing his pictures and adding to the perfect perspective. His composition, too, was unexampled. Titian lived to be nearly one hundred and died of the plague.

Another famous picture of the Bewailing of Christ is by Correggio, and hangs in the national gallery at Rome. It is a weird picture, showing Calvary with the three crosses in the background. It is rich in the dull golden blue, deep blues, dull reds and browns. It contains many figures, all of whom are in action, which makes a striking canvas. The dead Christ rests on the arms of His mother, who gently holds one of His hands in hers and looks sorrowfully at the dead face.

The third station is an Armenian hospice, where Jesus Christ sank beneath the weight of the cross and near by there is a broken column upon which it lay and rested his hand when he was about to fall.

The fourth station lies between the traditional house of the poor man Lazarus and the rich man Dives. An inscription is a lamp to the left records that we have come upon the meeting place of the East and the West. Here are khans, the horse and camel market, stalls for the sale of all kinds of goods, stores, even cafes and restaurants. This particular spot has been called the busiest place in all Judea. The women from Bethlehem—wearing a distinctive garb—are making. Nuns, monks and other ecclesiastics in their distinctive habits, as well as the uniformed military attempting to keep order, add to the perfect perspective. His composition, too, was unexampled. Titian lived to be nearly one hundred and died of the plague.

The last part of this street is vaulted and here is the seventh station, where Christ fell the second time. Here is the people of St. John for the entertainment of pilgrims.

At the Eighth Station.

A black cross in Greek monasteries marks the eighth station and is where Christ addressed to women who met him.

The ninth station is a Coptic monastery and here again Christ is said to have sunk under the weight of the cross.

The remaining six stations are in the church of the Holy Sepulcher.

A narrow sloping street leads down into a small plaza in which there are large paving stones. At the sides are small booths where crucifixes and rosaries from Bethlehem and Hebrew are offered for sale. Here also stand several military guards. We are at the entrance to the church, set at an angle in a small structure upon the outside, one not at all keeping with what one might expect for were it possible, all of Christendom might contribute to making this the most beautiful building in the world. The key to the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, however, is a possession of a family of Jerusalem—a hereditary honor that is in the hands of Hosienius, Roman Catholics, Greeks, Syrians, Abyssinians, Armenians, Copta, Maronites—representative of all Christians save the Protestants, have hours of worship assigned to them, when religious services are conducted according to their own ritual. And here come the millions to pray. Next Sunday morning Easter, the keys will be passed from this church to those of the church of the Resurrection.

King David's Tower.

Then I passed inside the gate, a station relates. To the right, rising like a great medieval castle or strong hold, I saw the tower of David, one of the huge relics left intact when Titus destroyed the city of Jerusalem. This tower was not built by King David, but it is likely that it rests upon stones which were ordered placed in position—enormous stones larger than any placed in modern constructions.

From the balcony of my room at the hotel I looked out over the deep blue sea. There were twinkling lights everywhere and far away them all. In the background, John wings his hands in agony. Very little is known of the artist whose brush created this great work, except that he was born in 1490, in a small province in Italy, where his father was a gardener on an estate belonging to the nobility. He studied painting with several masters, being greatly influenced in his work by the Raphael pictures. He died in 1528, while still a young man.

THE FOUR CUBS

"Well, well, well, well," said Billie Browne to the little lion cubs in the room.

He said "well, well, well, well" four times because there were four little lion cubs and he meant one "well" for each cub.

He didn't want to be stung by his words, and he thought each cub might like a word to himself, or herself. Three of the cubs would grow up to be lions and one would grow up to be a lioness.

"Teg," said the first lion cub, "I'm well, thank you."

"Tim well, too," said the second lion cub.

"So am I," said the third lion cub.

"I am also," said the fourth lion cub.

They were very young and were very playful. They had looked out upon the world from their zoo home and had seen the sunshine and the trees in the distance and had thought it was very pleasant.

They were anxious to romp all the time except when they were sleeping.

As they hadn't been in the world very long they needed a lot of sleep, so they said. They explained this to Billie Browne.

"I don't know really why it is," said the first little lion cub, "but my sister and brothers have decided with me that this is the reason baby cats, baby girls, baby boys, babies of all sorts need so much sleep."

"You will notice that they did need a great deal of sleep."

"Indeed, they do," agreed Billie Browne.

"In fact," he added, "I've come several times to talk to you and you've all been asleep."

"Sorry," growled the lion
