NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

What the Aircraft Board Is Learning From Army and Navy Officers.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
COL. WILLIAM MITCHELL'S pet scheme of the creation of a separate department of aeronautics, received many sharp blows during the first week of the hearings held by the President's special aircraft board. For the army it was opposed by Acting Secretary of War Davis, Maj. Gen. Mason M. Patrick, chief of the army air service. Major General Hines, chief of staff, and Brig. Gen. Hugh Drown, assistant chief of staff for the navy, voiced objections. Admiral Eberic, chief of naval operations, Admiral Moffat, chief of the bureau of aeronautics, and Admiral Strauss of the general board. Incidentally, Colonel Mitchell had been suspended from active service.

Mr. Davis told the board and the American people that there was no need for fear about the condition of the nation's air forces, insisting that the service would be quickly put in excellent shape if congress would grant larger appropriations. General Patrick, though opposing a separate aeronautics department in the cabinet, is a supporter of Mitchell's plan. He and Navy departments into a department of national defense; furthermore, he supported the charges made by Colonel Mitchell, that the development of an adequate air force has been hampered by higher officials who do not comprehend its vast importance. He justified the policy of conservative building of planes until there is certainty as to the types wanted for quantity production. But in contrast with Mitchell's assertion that the army has but a handful of effective, up-to-date planes, General Patrick said he has 240 for use in an emergency. Of these, 90 are bombardment planes, 240 observation planes, 26 pursuit planes and 31 training planes. He stated he had no attack planes. In addition, he has 40 obsolete planes and 1,200 others that could not be used in war.

Asked just what is the matter with the air service, General Patrick replied: "The air service is not treated as a real member of the family. Our recommendations are frequently ignored and our motives questioned. The fact is that the development of the air arm has assumed the importance of every other arm of the national defense. Aircraft reaching out over sea have minimized somewhat the need of land defense. "Striving far in advance, they have made victory less necessary for reconnoissance. "Conducting operations far beyond the range of land guns, they have made military loss important, and even the infantry, the backbone of the army. "So, coming into being as it has, the air arm has not been welcomed. The recommendations for its development must be passed on by officers belonging to these various other arms whose importance is being minimized by the new force and they need, they doubt realize the importance of the new weapon. It was a long time before I could get any recognition of the air force in the War department."

General Hines and Drown disagreed with General Patrick as to the superior importance of the air force to infantry, cavalry and artillery. In the matter of congressional appropriations, Representative Vinson of Georgia, a member of the board, asserted, on grounds he cited the air force funds the War department had asked for.

NEXT the navy came to bat, and Secretary Wilbur led off with the declaration that to divorce the aeronautics arm from the navy arm would be a well-nigh irreparable mistake. Admiral Eberic asserted that adoption of the Mitchell proposal would "bring disaster to national defense interests," and Admiral Moffat argued that because of the intimate connection between naval vessels and naval aircraft in the fighting of future sea battles, it would be suicidal to take aviation away from the navy and put it in a separate department.

"Such a change in organization would violate the fundamental requirement of national defense, which is unity," he explained. "The plan for a separate department is a disorganized, a disunity, and economically. The organization of a single air service would fatally complicate the national defense problem. This has been amply demonstrated abroad. Commander J. H. Towers, a naval aviator of wide experience, who has lately returned from duty abroad, has stated, 'The more I see of the separate air force idea the more opposed I am to it.'"

Admiral Strauss said that the experiment of England and Italy with a unified air service has been a failure and England is reverting to the old system. Secretary of Commerce Hoover and Postmaster General New were called on to tell the board about commercial aviation prospects and they agreed that America is about to witness the development of the greatest commercial air transport system in the world, if only the government does its part.

Mr. Hoover told the board that commercial aviation can be established on a vast scale in this country without the payment of the large government subsidies to private enterprise which have resulted in the development of the European aerial carriage systems, and he believes without the payment of any direct subsidy at all. But it will be necessary for congress to enact air transport legislation analogous to the merchant marine law, he said, and to provide for air navigation service by the government, such as is afforded water navigation.

BENEFITS starting its technical investigation of the causes of the Shenandoah disaster, the naval court of inquiry brought out a number of facts concerning the dirigible's fatal flight. It was learned that Lieutenant Commander Zachary Lansdowne had recommended that the flight be deferred until the second week of September, but this was not because of probable weather conditions, but as a result of the limited time for receiving, recharging and refueling the airship at Scott field, Illinois, and at Detroit. The Navy department already had deferred to the opinion of Lansdowne that the flight should be made in September instead of July because the earlier month was the season of violent storms in the Middle West, but it was not until the second week of September because it was desired that the dirigible should fly over a number of state fairs held during the first week.

JOSEPH CAILLAUX, French finance minister, joined with his colleagues of the debt-funding commission, arrived in Washington, prepared to settle the French debt terms quickly and in a friendly spirit. He was on the way across the Atlantic when Caillaux formulated the terms he intended to offer the United States, but he did not tell them to anyone, not even to the other members of the commission. Moreover, the American commission has agreed that the proceedings shall be in secret, so probably the public must await their conclusion to learn authoritatively what Caillaux has to say. It was stated in Washington that if no agreement had been reached before October 3, when Caillaux must leave for home to prepare for the opening of the French parliament, he will offer annual payments beginning in 1921, of $40,000,000 to be increased after 1931. If this is not accepted, he will ask the United States to send a commission to study France's financial situation and capacity to pay. He frankly said he expected easier terms than those granted Great Britain.

A S. S. S. Wagon of the League of Nations visited the Missouri question too hard for it to settle, and so referred it to the Hague court. The British and French members of the league committee had agreed that the league should handle the problem, but the Swedish delegate was obstinate, and as the constitution demands unanimity of all committee reports, he carried his point and had the matter referred. The British both the delegates in Geneva and the officials at home are much disgruntled and now some of them begin to doubt the full efficacy of the league. As for Turkey, there is no assurance that she will accept the decision of the world court if it is adverse to her claims.

ACCORDING to the London Daily Graphic, the British government has learned that since 1922 more than $1,000,000 of Moscow gold has been paid to Socialist members of parliament, trade union officials and prominent radical leaders. The home office has the details of the case and the paper says there would be a tremendous political sensation if the names of the recipients of the propaganda money were made public. The largest payment to an individual is said to have been $20,000. Another London paper says Georges Tchitcherine, former foreign minister, is likely to be removed because he failed to prevent Germany's turning to England and France instead of Russia for a security pact. He may be succeeded by M. Karakhan, now ambassador to China.

AMERICAN aviators who are in the service of the Sultan of Morocco in the Rifian war have been warned by the State department that they are violating the law and are liable to arrest and punishment in the United States. But they assert they have taken no oath of allegiance, have signed no enlistment papers and feel quite justified in serving under the Sultan. They declare they will remain there throughout the campaign. The French commander is making use of them continually and they have demonstrated their efficiency in many bombing operations. They frequently being against unfortified Rif villages. A report in the London Times has offered $5,000 for every member of the sherrifian squadron brought to him dead or alive. The French and Spanish armies are still advancing into Rif territory but will soon be compelled to dig in for the rainy season, when the more mobile natives will have a chance for swift raiding. Their foes hope and expect that the winter season will bring famine that will compel the Rifians to submit.

INSIDE facts of the futile campaign to secure for Gen. Leonard Wood the Republican presidential nomination in 1920 were brought out in Chicago in the suit of William Cooper Proctor of Cincinnati to recover $50,000 from Col. A. C. Sprague of Chicago in starting to sue for joint liability signed a note for $100,000 to obtain a loan from a bank. The defense alleged the campaign cost $1,750,000 and was conducted entirely by Proctor who had sole control of the expenditure of the money, telling those who protested against extravagance that it was none of their business.

PROMINENT men who died during the week included James Dering, Chicago and Miami real-estate magnate, and former chief of the Deering-Bartlett company, who succumbed to a complication of diseases while at sea on his return from France; Sir Francis Darwin, son of Charles Darwin and himself an eminent scientist; Paul Bartlett, American sculptor, at his home in Rome; A. C. Bedford, chairman of the board of the Standard Oil company of New Jersey and Sir Pratap Singh, the maharajah of Jammu and Kashmir, whose nephew and heir was the "Mr. X" of the blackmail case which created such a sensation in London last winter.

RESUMPTION of civil war in China between the forces of General Feng and Marshal Chang Tso-lin is expected "within a few days," according to dispatches from Tokyo. The first fighting will be for the control of Shanxi province, and Marshal Wu Pei-Fu is likely to take an active part there. The Japanese government has declared it will maintain neutrality.

PRESIDENT COVILLIERE has issued a proclamation recommending that the week of October 6 be observed as national fire prevention week. The appeals for "earnest study of the principles of fire protection" and asks all state and municipal officials and citizens generally for fullest cooperation.

Cross-Word Puzzles

Boon to Golf Widow

It already has been suggested that cross-word puzzles are the almost proverbial and overdue instruments of vengeance ready to the hands of wives who have long suffered from golfing husbands. The fact that a wife is daily getting boggy for the solution of puzzles in the newspaper betrays the moral further. The golf widow can now be tied with the cross-word puzzle widower.

Evening conversations in the home should begin to have two sides and should run somewhat as follows: "Sorry to be late for dinner, dear. Had to get in 18 holes." "You're not late. Dinner's not ready yet. Had to fill in the last 18 squares in my puzzle." "Well, that's all right. I had a great game. Made bogey on two holes. Say, do you realize what bogey is on the fourth?" "Eleven, isn't it?" "What? Eleven strokes?" "No, silly. Eleven minutes for the fourth puzzle." "I'm talking about golf." "But let me tell you about the third puzzle I worked on today. It has the sweetest interlock!" "Shush! On the fourteenth I had Jeff one down and—"

"Two across. Now it's time you're listening to me after all these years of golf monologues. Lend an ear. On the sixteenth square across I was as you might say, in a trap to think of a word of five letters meaning a Tyrolean outery. What do you know? It was 'yodel.' After that I found a personal pronoun and got lost in the tangle of the lower left-hand corner. Well, I got out of trouble but it cost me three minutes!"

"What a lot of trivia! You ought to have seen me today after I'd sliced—"

"—with the dence of a pretty niblick!"

"—gessed the word was 'orthogonal'—"

"—after which I sunk a long—"

"—key word. One minute to play!"

"—Blah!"

"—Riah yourself!"

"(A tribute of half an hour's silence.)"

"Well, my dear, what's the latest dirt on the neighbors?"

"It's quite interesting, dear. I'll be glad to tell you. But first tell me what else has been said down at the office today."—Fairfax Downey, in New York Herald Tribune.

Mental Disease Statistics

That nearly 14 out of every 100 patients admitted to hospitals for mental diseases recover, and that more women are cured than men, is shown by an investigation of all hospitals for mental diseases in the United States which the federal census bureau has just completed. The recovery rate for insanity due to drugs was about 43 for every 100 cases, the highest recovery rate of any type of insanity. Next comes alcoholic insanity with 38 per cent of all cases curable. Women recover twice as often as men do from insanity due to physical injuries, but only 30 women recover from alcoholic insanity to 40 men. The most hopeless of all types of insanity is general paralysis of the insane, of which only five out of 1,000 recover.

Industries Active

The manufacturers of the United States are apparently making a new high record in their industrial activities in 1923. This evidence of an enlargement of their output is found in a study made by the Trade Record of the National City Bank of New York of increases in their demands for the classes of manufacturing materials which they find it necessary to draw from the outside world.
